RIGHT IN LEBANON OPPOSES TROOPS FROM ARAB LEAGUE

No Evidence Seen in Beirut on Arrival of Contingents from Other Than Syria

By JAMES M. MARKHAM
Special to The New York Times

BEIRUT, Lebanon, June 11—Syria and the Palestinian guerrilla movement were at odds today on how to use the "symbolic" peacekeeping force decided upon by the Arab League, but outright opposition to any such force was expressed by Lebanon's right-wing Christian leadership.

Interior Minister Camille Chamoun, who heads a rightist militia, warned that the league would be responsible for "drowning Lebanon in blood."

The Libyan Prime Minister, Maj. Abdel Salam Jalloud, who arrived here as a mediator and argued the Syrian position, was reported to be a convert to the Palestinian view on the Arab League peacekeeping force—that it should "replace" Syrian troops.

But there were no signs that Syria's President, Hafez al-Assad, intended to pull back his expeditionary force, which in the last two days has reportedly been bolstered by about 1,000 men to a total of 13,000 regular soldiers.

Shelling During the Night
After a night of gun battles and shelling duels between Syrian troops entrenched around Beirut's closed airport and Palestinian guerrillas and their Lebanese leftist and Moslem allies, this capital was again quiet during the day.

Meanwhile, there have been no tangible signs so far of any Arab "green helmets," as the Arab League force has been dubbed by the Beirut press.

There were reports from Damascus yesterday that Algerian troops for the Arab League force were arriving in Lebanon, and the Beirut radio said last night that a contingent of 100 Sudanese had landed at the airport here.

But the radio, which is leftist controlled, said later that the troops might have been Libyans or Algerians and then abandoned the news item, and today there was press speculation that Syrian reinforcements had in fact landed.

In the wake of overnight clashes, the Palestinian press service, Wafa, accused the Syrians of having shelled the southern port town of Saida with artillery and rockets.

Wafa also reported that the Syrians had issued an ultimatum to the Lebanese Arab Army, a "deserter force, at Rachaya, near the Syrian border, demanding that it evacuate its positions there. It was the second such reported demand to the Rachaya garrison since the Syrians entered Lebanon in strength last week.

U.N. Meeting Urges Curb On Private Land Holding

Conference in Vancouver, Ending After 2 Weeks, Approves 100 Proposals for Improving Community Life

By GLADWIN HILL
Special to The New York Times

VANCOUVER, British Columbia, June 11—The United Nations Conference on Human Settlements, dominated by third-world representatives, today endorsed a call for sharp restrictions on the private ownership of land.

After two weeks of deliberations here, the 4,500 delegates approved more than 100 recommendations aimed at improving community life around the world.

The delegates asked that land be managed as a public resource rather than a profit-generating commodity and called for redistribution of land in poor countries and for a more equitable distribution of wealth.

"Land, because of its unique nature and the crucial role it plays in human settlement, cannot be treated as an ordinary asset, controlled by individuals and subject to the pressures and inefficiencies of the market," the conference declared.

"Private land ownership also is a principal instrument of accumulation and concentration of wealth and therefore contributes to social injustice; if unchecked it may become a major obstacle in the planning and implementation of development schemes."

The closing hours of the conference were punctuated by parliamentary maneuvering by the Arab bloc to inject declarations critical of Israel into the record, and by an unsuccessful attempt by Panama to engage the United States in debate over the Panama Canal.

The Arab bloc, supported by Communist and third world nations, persuaded the conference to endorse a statement, opposed by Israel, saying: "In occupied territories the uprooting of the native population and the establishment of new settlements for intruders is inadmissible."

The vote was 69 to 8 with 26 abstentions.

ALBANY APPROVES A 15-MONTH PLAN TO RESCUE CITY U.

Senate Adopts the Assembly Version With Concession Won by Republicans

By LINDA GREENHOUSE
Special to The New York Times

ALBANY, June 11—The Legislature passed a Democratic designed rescue plan for the City University of New York tonight that will allow the university to reopen its doors to 270,000 students on Monday and to function with its state support intact for the next academic year.

With its leaders attempting to put the best face on their nearly complete capitulation, the Republican-controlled Senate passed by a vote of 38 to 17 the rescue package that had been passed by the Democratic-controlled Assembly on Wednesday night.

Both houses also passed an amendment to that bill that contained the one concession the Republicans had won in yesterday's final negotiations.

Panel on Financing
Instead of providing for a three-year financial takeover of the City University by the state, the amended bill defers the question of financing the 1977-78 and 1978-79 school years until a blue-ribbon panel, set up under the bill, studies the financing of all higher education in the state, and reports to the Legislature next March.

At the same time, however, the bill says that "the state must assume the responsibility for public post-secondary education in the City of New York beyond the associate degree, as it does elsewhere in the state"

—language that will almost certainly be translated eventually into full state financing for the City University.

Governor Carey will sign the bill tomorrow.
The passage of the rescue plan tonight ended an extraordinary two-week period during which the university, having overspent its budget for months, shut down just before final examinations and commencement, and a hastily reappointed Board of Higher Education voted to end the 129-year history of free tuition at the institution.

For much of that time the Legislature remained paralyzed,

Legally Dubious Tax Bill Resolves Albany Dispute

By STEVEN R. WEISMAN
Special to The New York Times

ALBANY, June 11—The New York State Legislature resolved a long-standing dispute over local government financing today by taking two contradictory approaches to the problem—one sought by the Assembly and the other by the Senate—in a hybrid bill that even its sponsors suspect is unconstitutional.

In effect, the measure approved by both houses tonight says that the courts throw out one approach, the other one takes effect immediately.

"Will it fly?" someone asked Albert H. Blumenthal, the Assembly majority leader, before the debate today.

"Well, I think it will crawl," the Manhattan Democrat-Liberal replied.

The bill was approved 42 to 11 by the Senate and 83 to 59 by the Assembly.

The compromise had the added distinction of having Governor Carey as its author. The Governor stepped into the negotiations last night because Warren M. Anderson, the Senate majority leader, was holding out for his approach in return for agreement on legis-

Development Head Leaves as Beame Alters Effort to End Job Drain

By MICHAEL STERNE

Alfred Eisenpreis resigned his post as Economic Development Administrator yesterday as Mayor Beame moved ahead with plans to restructure the city's efforts to aid New York's sagging economy and to give those efforts the highest policy priority.

The Mayor said through his press spokesman, Sidney J. Jimmy Carter's sleepy, friendly home town of Plains (population: 683, radius, one-half mile) has changed very little since its birth at the turn of the century.

With the exception of a new gasoline station, owned by the Carters' only competitor, O. A. Williams, a new police station and bank and the family's 15-year-old peanut warehouse, Main Street still looks like a setting for Matt Dillon's "Gunsmoke."

The phone book is still one and a half pages. There is only one policeman (he is also the city clerk and police chief) but no jail. The barber shop is open Saturdays only, because the barber, A. L. Blanton, also functions as mayor and holds a job as Navy air traffic controller at the city airport in Albany, about 36 miles away.

There is no hospital, no doctor, no motel, hotel, book store, delicatessen, laundry or mixed drink. And the only eating place is Neal's Roadside Sandwich Stand, with a deep pit barbecue in a shack out back.

But with Mr. Carter's meteoric rise from peanut farmer to potential President, Plains is finally beginning to stir from its slumber of eight decades. Six months ago the streets were deserted. Now there is bustle and bustle.

Thousands of tourists, tradesmen, hocksters, Secret Service men and reporters have trooped into town from 38 states and 10 foreign countries, like so many lem-

U.S. Studies Charge Of Sex-for-Vote Bid

WASHINGTON, June 11—Federal investigators are looking into charges by Elizabeth Ray that she was ordered by former Representative Kenneth J. Gray of Illinois into a sexual encounter with Senator Mike Gravel, Democrat of Alaska, to further Mr. Gray's hopes of securing the Senator's assistance in passing legislation, according to sources close to the investigation.

An independent account of that purported incident, first related by Miss Ray to the Federal Bureau of Investigation two weeks ago, has been provided to The New York Times by Colleen Gardner, a former Capitol Hill secretary, who has said that she saw the encounter.

Hays's Pill Dose Called 10 Times Usual

BARNESVILLE, Ohio, June 11—Representative Wayne Hays's personal physician said today that laboratory tests indicated that the 65-year-old Ohio Democrat had taken 10 times or more of the prescribed amount of a sleeping medicine that put him into a coma last night.

Mr. Hays came out of the coma early today at Barnesville Hospital and began what doctors called a "dramatic recovery."

Dr. Richard Phillips, Mr. Hays's physician for 17 years, said of the apparent dosage of the drug, Dalmane, "There is the possibility of a suicide attempt."

A spokesman for the Food and Drug Administration in Washington called Dalmane "one of the safer prescription drugs available for the treatment of insomnia." He said that in 1974, the latest year for which statistics were available, 569 cases of Dalmane poisoning had been reported to the F.D.A.'s National Poison Clearinghouse, causing the hospitalization of 185 people and the death of one person.

Asked if Mr. Hays was the kind of man who would have difficulty withstanding the kind of pressure he has been under since his affair with Elizabeth Ray became public, Dr. Phillips said, "Yes, this is Winifred Cary lives above Urquhart Castle. In the background, a medieval ruin that dominates the loch at midpoint. Mrs. Cary, 69, claims to have seen the monster for the first time in 1917, from a boat out on the loch.

Expeditions, Too, Are a Loch Ness Legend

By ROBERT E. SEMPLE Jr.
Special to The New York Times
DRUMNADROCHIT, Scotland, June 11—Jimmy McLennan is one of the old-time crofters in the highlands. For most of his 62 years, he has worked 78 inhospitable acres on a ridge high above Loch Ness, renting the property from some distant landlord and doing well enough to raise five children. But he has never seen the monster—unless, of course, one counts a piece of garden furniture.

"I was down there with the sheep one day," Mr. McLennan recalls, sweeping a weatherbeaten hand in the general direction of a hillside that drops sharply toward the waters of the loch. "I saw something strange in the water. Then I saw some boys rowing towards it, and when they lifted it out, it was a lawn chair. That's the closest I ever came to a monster, and I've been looking at that water for most of this century."

But while Mr. McLennan has never had a "sighting"—unlike Winifred Cary, who says she has had 15, or Father Gregory at the monastery in Fort Augustus, who claims one—he believes there is "something down there." So do most of the people in these parts, which is one reason why so few of them seem to resent the intrusion of yet another team of monster-hunting scientists, an expedition sponsored by the Academy of Applied Science and The New York Times.

Mystery of the Glen They have lived so long with the legend and come so firmly to believe it that the prospect of independent verification is not likely to affect the accepted continuity of their lives. The only thing they wouldn't like is for someone to catch the creature and put it in a tank, as a Japanese expedition reportedly set out to do several years ago. That would be stealing a bit too much from the mystery of the glen.

"Those little fellows couldn't speak a word of English," said Mr. McLennan, whose own highland burr bears only a vague resemblance to the smoother vowels of the south. They just sailed around in a little boat, mostly in circles.
The people of the Great Glen, whose cottages are the dark and deep loch, have done surprisingly little to exploit the monster. There is, to be sure, the tiny little "monsterburger" stand on Route A-82 on the western edge of the loch and someone has put together a lethal blend called "Monster's Choice," which tastes suspiciously like beer. And Gordon Mackintosh is selling huge, stuffed "nessies" at his toy store in Inverness for $400 each, which he hopes to unload on wealthy tourists at a rate of about one a month.

Little Bric-a-brac But there are no big, brassy hotels, or pubs named "Nessie's Arms," and very little bric-a-brac. One senses that the people here decided long ago that they could not conquer the geography of their lives with one-shot commercial deals, that prosperity in the highlands means simply staying even. This is probably why Mr. Mackintosh not only runs a toy store but also sells land as well, why Tony Gerlings farms his acreage and rents out hillside chalets and hires himself out as a technical adviser to a television crew, and why the farmers on the green but thin hillsides set aside a few rooms for bed-and-breakfast tourists.

Yet even though they do not depend on the monster for their livelihood, the highlanders of Loch Ness appreciate its value, and this in turn reinforces their otherwise mystical belief that something is there—a belief that is unlikely to be shaken even if the strobe lights and closed-circuit television cameras fall to yield any new photographic evidence.
One local resident put it this way: "Some people may have been drunk when they saw what they saw, and some may have seen a log; but there are a lot of people who say they have seen a hump or a head or a tail or a flipper, and there can't be that many liars in the Glen."

A man whose livelihood gives his word extra credibility is the Rev. Gregory Brucey, a subprior at Scotland's only Benedictine monastery at Fort Augustus, at the southern tip of the loch.

Legend of a Saint

It was not far from here, according to legend, that St. Columba, whose statue sits in a niche in the monastery's wall overlooking the loch, saved a terrified swimmer by commanding "a certain water monster not to go further nor touch thou that man." It was here, too, that Father Gregory saw something four years ago.
"It was a lovely morning, and the sun was warm and the water smooth," he recalled the other day. "And with me was a friend, an organist from London. We suddenly noticed a big commotion about 200 yards out in the water, and then a black neck appeared, about eight inches in diameter and seven or eight feet high, followed by a hump. It rose, then dove sideways back into the water. It was not a boat, or a log or a fish. It was a different animal."

Father Gregory—whose sighting corresponds to many others reported over the years—hopes that the present expedition will succeed. And then, he says, "we ought to leave the monster alone."
"In this technological age, we've placed a label on everything," he said. "I am a champion of the unknown. Mystery intrigues people, and so it should remain."
If one's agnosticism fades when confronted by Father Gregory's stern faith, it disappears completely when confronted by Winifred Cary's cyclonic certitude. Now 69, with everything but her voice and conviction slowed down by arthritis. Mrs. Cary spent summers in the Glen before settling here in 1951 in a house high above Urquhart Castle, a medieval ruin that dominates the loch at midpoint.

"I first saw the monster in 1917, when I was 11, and I was out in a boat with my brother," Mrs. Cary says. "A huge hump appeared before us, like a large upturned boat, and then moved away very rapidly. We got out fast. I did not have another sighting until 1954, when my son Bill was home on leave, and I was down in the front field overlooking the castle."

Mrs. Cary herself has never obtained a photograph ("I can't go around with a camera draped around my neck all the time," she says). This illustrates part of the problem: those who have recorded good "sightings" have rarely carried cameras, while those who have spent hours with telescopic cameras rarely seem to get good sightings. Despite nearly a decade of dedicated watching, for example, members and volunteers of the Loch Ness Investigation Bureau obtained only a few inconclusive pictures of shapes on the water, a failure that has led to the newer efforts to use underwater photography and sonar.

This may have been the result of bad luck, or even a certain camera shyness on the monster's part, but Mrs. Cary has another explanation.

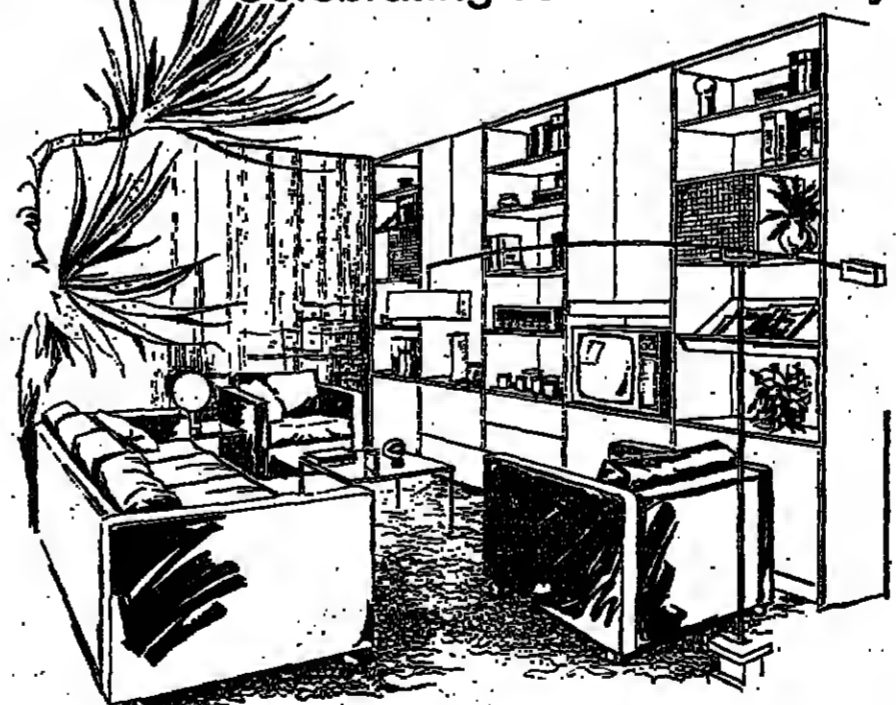

A Moribund Bureau

"Most of the volunteers were students who came up here for a lark," she says rather testily. "I think they spent their time in the woods. In fact, I know they did. Once I had a good sighting, and I rushed up behind the house to the garage, where a couple of students were supposed to be in charge of a camera. As it turned out, they were locked in each other's arms."

The investigation bureau is now more or less moribund, and there are only a handful of dedicated surface watchers left.
"What the bureau needs is money," says Richard Raynor, a 26-year-old who came some years ago to man a telescopic camera, then stayed on to run a small museum in Fort Augustus. "We need money in order to mount a dredging operation in search for bones on the bottom. Bones don't run away when you come near them."

Mr. Raynor was asked whether irrefutable verification of the monster's existence would take the charm out of the search and diminish his interest in the subject.
Not at all, he said. "This would encourage the kind of support we need to learn more—where the monster or monsters come from, how they get their food, what their habits are. The animals are much more interesting than the myth."

26 Refugees Are Reported Seized in Buenos Aires

BUENOS AIRES, June 11 (AP) — Heavily armed men stormed into two hotels before dawn today and herded out at least 26 political refugees including two teen-agers, United Nations refugee agency officials said.

The gunmen smashed open rooms, hit the exits and stole their money and personal documents, according to refugees who were left behind. The gunmen shouted "Police, police," but did not produce any identification, the witnesses said.

The raids occurred less than 48 hours after gunmen ransacked a refugee office and stole master lists containing the names and addresses of perhaps as many as 8,000 political exiles from neighboring nations.

United Nations officials and refugee community leaders expressed fears that the refugees might be killed, as other exiled foreigners have been in recent weeks.

The presidential press office assured the refugees last night that they were in no specific danger in Argentina. It attributed recent political violence to "small groups answering to international direction."

Right-wing death squads have kidnapped and killed a number of foreign leftists as well as hundreds of Argentines. Their most prominent recent victims were former President Juan José Torres of Bolivia and two former members of the Uruguayan congress, Zelmira Michelini and Hector Gutierrez Ruiz.

Dr. Enrique Pinto, a representative of the United Nations High Commission for Refugees here, said 22 Chileans, a Uruguayan and a Paraguayan, all under the commission's care, were rounded up between 2 A.M. and 4 A.M.

Dr. Pinto said he reported the matter to government authorities but was told no official agency had any information on their whereabouts.

Witnesses said the abductors used Ford Falcon sedans, the same kind of car used by about 10 gunmen who stole the refugee lists early Wednesday from the Catholic International Migration Committee.

The same kind of car who rounded up the refugees also used in the abduction of the two members of the Uruguayan congress and is frequently used by right-wing death squads.

The squads have been in operation since long before the March 24 coup that toppled the government of President Isabel Martínez Perón.

The military government has said it intends to protect human rights.

13 Mercenaries Opens in Angolan Capital

AN AMERICAN defense lawyer, Robert Casner Jr., who is defending the two American prisoners, raised three basic legal issues. According to the Newburg statute, he said, crimes against peace can be tried only in an international military court only high ranking officials or military commanders can be tried for war crimes, and the 1966 "combatants' disciplinary law," which provides for the death penalty for the enemy, has not been ratified by the Angolan Government.

The American lawyer received unexpected support today in the form of two cablegrams to the court from an American mercenary recruiter, Dave Buffin. He claimed all responsibility for the recruitment of the two Americans—Gary M. Ackler of Sacramento, Calif., and Daniel F. Gezirhart of Washington—to fight on the side of the National Front for the Liberation of Angola (F.N.L.A.) after Cuban troops had gone to the assistance of the Popular Movement for the Liberation of Angola (M.P.L.A.) in the Angolan civil war last winter.

"They are not responsible for war crimes in Angola," Mr. Buffin said. "They were recruited by me to join the F.N.L.A. as the Cubans joined the M.P.L.A. The war is over. They should be freed."

Mr. Ackler and two other prisoners, both Britons, testified today that they were not mercenaries in the classic sense but jobless misfits who were brought to Angola under false pretenses.

"I didn't come here just for the money or to fight Communism or for any one reason," Mr. Ackler told the court, "but basically because of personal problems."

Under questioning, Mr. Ackler said that he had had "problems with my family and myself" since he was 5. He recounted how he had tried to commit suicide three times and had been discharged from the Marines because the psychiatrist found he had "some mental problems."

Mr. Ackler told the court that he did not hate Russians, but would not fight for the Soviet-backed Popular Movement for more pay because his grandfather's three nephews had been killed by the Russians in World War II, his grandfather's niece put in a brothel and another relative sent to Siberia.

One Dead, 36 Wounded As Amin Escapes Death

NAIROBI, Kenya, June 11 (Reuters)—President Idi Amin of Uganda escaped an assassination attempt in Kampala last night when three grenades were thrown at a parade of police recruits, killing one person and wounding 36, the Uganda radio reported today.

The radio, monitored here and quoting Ugandan military spokesmen, said the grenades, of "American and Israeli type," were thrown as the president left a police graduation parade at the Nsambya barracks.

The spokesman said those responsible for the incident were being interrogated.

Their arrests followed help in identification from members of the public, he added.

The radio broadcast gave no further details.

The radio quoted the military spokesman as saying: "Since the explosion of the grenades and the declaration of the economic war in Uganda by Field Marshal Amin, his enemies, and those of Uganda in general, have been many."

The radio announcement followed strong rumors in Nairobi today that President Amin had narrowly escaped an assassination attempt last night. But no mention of the incident was made in earlier broadcasts.

The broadcast said "enemies of Uganda" threw three American and Israeli-type hand grenades into the crowd as President Amin was leaving. The military spokesman asked the public not to be alarmed and not to listen to rumors.

President Amin, who overthrew President Milton Obote in 1971, escaped an assassination attempt 17 months ago, when he switched cars taking him to the northern town of Gulu.

While President Amin drove himself at the rear of the official convoy, the Citroën-Maserati limousine in which he should have been traveling was sprayed with machine-gun fire.

Four senior army officers died in the incident, which reliable Ugandan sources said occurred January 7, 1975.

11 in Angola Declare They Continue to Fight

From Nairobi it is difficult to assess Mr. Savimbi's reported claims of success in what his aide described as a new phase of the war against the governing Popular Front for the Liberation of Angola. However, monitored radio reports from Luanda, the Angolan capital, referring to a need to drive out "bandits," indicate that some level of resistance is continuing.

The spokesman here said that the Savimbi forces were receiving no support from foreign powers. Until they were defeated in the civil war, they had been backed by South Africa and earlier by China and the West.

The spokesman also said that there had been no contact between the National Union and the National Front for the Liberation of Angola, a third national force that had been centered in the north and has apparently disappeared in defeat. Mr. Savimbi last year forged a fragile alliance with the National Front's chief, Holden Roberto, who later fled to Zaire.

The National Union representative said he had received information from Mr. Savimbi in a packet brought to him in another African country by Christopher Edwards, a black American free-lance journalist and National Union sympathizer who spent the last three and a half months with the Savimbi forces.

According to the spokesman, Mr. Savimbi, together with 800 of his soldiers and 400 civilians, marched for 800 miles through southern Angola rallying support among the Ovambo tribesmen who had been his major backers.

The region of his strength after his defeat in February was to the southeast of the central Angolan town of Huambo, an area of dense bush uncrossed by many roads.

Now, according to the spokesman, Mr. Savimbi has extended the area of his support through most of southern Angola to a point north of the Cuanza river. The man said the major cities in this region were still held by the Popular Movement aided by Cuban troops.

Military communiqués reportedly brought to the spokesman by Mr. Edwards talked of liberated zones where 4,000 men were currently undergoing military training with the National Union. Eight thousand other men were said to be under arms, organized into groups of 50 to 200.

Reports of contacts in the last few months, told of the destruction of Popular Movement trucks by land mines, repeated

Rights Unit Appeals to Havana To End 'Disdain' for Prisoners

WASHINGTON, June 11 (AP)—The Inter-American Human Rights Commission has appealed to the Cuban Government to take immediate steps to end what it calls "cruel, inhuman and degrading" treatment of political prisoners.

In a report, the commission says that numerous communications from individuals and organizations provide a "solid basis" for the belief that Cuba treats its political prisoners with "complete disdain."

Complaints received by the commission allege that prisoners in Cuba are often victimized by extreme physical and psychological cruelty, lack of medical assistance and adequate food. They allege degrading conditions, forced labor, solitary confinement, prohibition of visits and measures to force acceptance of political indoctrination. The commission declined to identify the sources as the Savimbi group is known.

"The Neto clique, the Cuban agents, the Russian social imperialists and their agents in Africa," the statement said, "keep trying to forget the interaction of factors which make our fight not only possible but ultimately victorious: A population two-thirds favorable to us, an economy destroyed by civil war and by the massive exodus of the Portuguese, a civil service that simply does not work, the continued presence of a foreign army of occupation."

600 Cubans Back Home
HAVANA, June 11 (Reuters) — About 600 Cuban soldiers who fought in Angola's civil war returned to Havana earlier this week, informed sources said.

This was the first important detachment known to have returned from Angola following an announcement that a gradual Cuban pullout was under way.

Passers-by in the streets of Havana cheered as at least 20 buses with troops drove through the capital earlier this week, the sources said. The buses carry up to 30 people. The troops' return has not so far been reported by Cuban newspapers.

SYRIANS BOLSTER FORCE IN LEBANON

Traveler in the Bekaa Valley Finds Tanks and Patrols Dominating the Roads

By JAMES F. CLARITY
 Special to The New York Times

RIYAQ, Lebanon, June 11— Syria has reinforced its military occupation here in the Bekaa Valley of central Lebanon with scores of tanks, communication camps and armed patrols at virtually every passable road leading to the main highway between Damascus and Beirut.

This afternoon, during a four-hour tour of the occupied Lebanese area, conducted by the Syrian Government, a group of Western and Arab reporters saw at least 25 Soviet-made T-54 Syrian tanks positioned along the north-south road that interdicts the main Damascus-Beirut highway. The tank crews sat sweating in or on their vehicles, apparently ready to move on short notice toward the main Syrian force which is on the other side of the Lebanon mountains, poised some 12 miles from Beirut.

Several times during the afternoon, Syrian tanks, singly or in groups of two or three, moved toward the front at high speed. Alongside roads and in fields in the valley at least three batteries of mobile artillery cannons were aimed at the sky, their crews standing by.

The Bekaa Valley reinforcements made in the last few days have led some analysts to feel that while it would only take a few days to withdraw the intervention forces, the scope and precision of the Syrian operation indicates that the Syrians are prepared to stay in Lebanon for months, or longer.

To some extent, the analysts feel, this indicates also a Syrian skepticism that a durable settlement of the Lebanese crisis—policed by troops from other Arab nations, Syria itself, and the Palestine Liberation Organization—will be achieved in the near future.

Since Syria's acceptance Wednesday of an Arab League proposal for a multinational Arab peacekeeping force in Lebanon, the government here has been noticeably silent on when Syria might begin withdrawal of its intervention forces. It was officially announced today that an Arab League delegation was arriving in Damascus to confer on carrying out the agreement, but no further details were disclosed.

Most of the Syrian intervention force is composed of units of the Third Armored Division, which is normally held in reserve for possible combat with Israeli forces on the Golan Heights. But the analysts say that with the reinforcement in the Bekaa Valley in recent days, the Syrians now have 12,000 troops and 350 to 400 tanks in Lebanon.

The Bekaa Valley has been the scene of some of the heaviest fighting of the 14-month Lebanese civil war, as predominantly Muslim leftists and Christian-dominated forces have battled around and in several towns.

Zahle, a Christian-dominated town a few miles north of the Damascus-Beirut highway that has endured bitter fighting, is now occupied by Syrian Army troops and is quiet.

Also a few miles off the main road, here in the predominantly Riyaq is a center of the Bekaa Valley area that Syria has reinforced.

Christian town of Riyaq, which has a Lebanese Air Force base on its edge, the Syrians have commandeered the St. Ann's Greek Catholic High School and are using it as a communications center, apparently charged with keeping contact with the forward forces and with maintaining the 15 miles or so of new communications cables the Syrians have laid along the ground on the highway between the Syrian border and their forward positions in Lebanon.

People in Riyaq, not under any apparent duress from their occupiers, spoke freely today of the relief they felt when the Syrian Army arrived. On the air base, the Lebanese commander, Lieut. Col. Fahim el-Hajj, said that he and his officers had voluntarily joined the Syrian forces. Colonel Hajj, who is a Maronite Christian, said that the base was still controlled by him and his fellow officers, but that the Syrians mostly stayed outside.

Colonel Hajj confirmed that the base had about a dozen Hawker Hunter fighter planes. He said that since the base officers joined the Syrian intervention, they had flown only reconnaissance missions, and had seen no combat against Lebanese Muslim leftists or Palestinian forces or any other Lebanese forces.

Looking wistfully at the sky, the colonel said, "But every day at about lunchtime we have two Israeli visitors fly over, taking photographs. No we don't go up to intercept them. They have Phantoms. They fly at mach 2. We are not even super-sonic."

One of the results the colonel said he hoped for if a durable truce was achieved in Lebanon, was a strengthening of Lebanese armed forces, "so that we can protect the frontiers against the real enemy."

The Syrian Government was silent today on its operations in Lebanon and on the tension created by reported movement of Iraqi troops toward the Syrian border. Unconfirmed reports persisted in Damascus tonight that the Syrians had flown troops to their border with Iraq, after the Damascus Government asserted yesterday that it would take "all urgent and appropriate measures" to counter the Iraqi military movements.

Belgium Rules Death For Some Hijackings

BRUSSELS, June 11 (Reuters)—The Belgian Parliament has passed a law introducing the death penalty for air hijackings resulting in death.
 The offense of hijacking itself will now carry a jail sentence of 10 to 20 years. The offender would face a life sentence for taking hostages and damaging the aircraft.
 Capital punishment already exists in Belgium, but death sentences are always commuted.

 also said that Syrian troops had arrested "dozens of Palestinians" at an important crossroads south of the city and had confiscated food, fuel and flour being transported from Salda to Beirut.

Here in Beirut, a siege mentality has spread in the western, heavily Moslem quarters of the city, which face hostile Christian militiamen to the east and Syrian troops at the exits to Salda and the mountains.

Commenting on the reports that the Libyan Prime Minister had shifted his views on the Arab League's projected peacekeeping force, a Palestinian intellectual said, "Like a good Arab, he tells his hosts what they want to hear."

The 20 Arab League countries, meeting in Cairo at the request of the Palestine Liberation Organization, decided early yesterday to send a token force composed of Libyan, Algerian, Saudi, Sudanese, Syrian and Palestinian troops.

A Western diplomat said his opinion was that the Syrians want to do as much as they can to do come as a cover for their own operation. The diplomat also expressed belief that Mr. Assad would like to put the Palestinians in "some kind of framework that would permit a Lebanese political solution."

Syria has said that it intervened militarily in Lebanon to force an end to the civil war between Christian rightists and an alliance of Lebanese Moslems and leftists, who were aided by Palestinians. The Syrian intervention came as the rightists appeared to be losing.

A tour this morning of the Palestinian quarter of Sabra and Shatila, which lie near the Beirut stadium, found widespread destruction from what looked to have been recent shelling attacks.

The two once populous neighborhoods—slums and small houses built largely of gingerbread—were deserted except for older men and women, children and guerrillas lug-ging automatic weapons.

From the apparent trajectories that had slammed into different places, it did seem that some had been fired from the eastern Christian neighborhoods and others from around Khalde where Syrian troops and Syrian-controlled As Salqa units have been stationed since the end of March.

In Shatila, in the shadow of the Camille Chamoun Stadium, a sniper occasionally picked away at fleeing human movements. Bullets cracked near a small variety store—the only shop seen open in the quarter—scattering two women in peasant dress.

The near evacuation of the Sabra and Shatila quarters appears to have pushed a large number of people deeper into the western heart of the city itself.

Along the once fashionable esplanade, hundreds of poor families have been relocated in apartments that rented in peacetime for $15,000 and $20,000 a year.

Many people believe that the Syrians, rather than attacking Beirut, will try to slowly strangle the city, which is without electricity, gasoline supplies or food stocks of much quantity. Also, a protracted siege might slowly exhaust the munition supply of the city's many fighting organizations.

Though Syrian troops around Khalde are blocking the entry of gasoline and food, some do slip into the city. Today an American journalist purchased a blackmarket gasoline, at $3 a gallon, which he was told had been shipped to the unofficial Christian capital of Junieh from Rumania and transported in the car tank of an Armenian Christian from the eastern to the western neighborhoods.

A Beirut hotel owner said somewhat proudly of his own countrymen and the siege: "These are a bunch of crooks around here. They'll find ways around it."

It is one of the ironies of the civil war that the intervention of Syria, nominally a leftist state, has called the lot of Lebanon's Christian neighborhoods, which for long months were out of gasoline and other necessities.

Now the right-wing Christian political leadership, which has counted on Mr. Assad's Government to tame the sprawling Palestinian guerrilla in Lebanon, appealing him by opposing League's proposed peacekeeping for President Sule has declared the intent—which is existent—opposite League's decision void.

Officials Go to DAMASCUS. (Reuters)—The Secretary General Riad arrived here to bring peace to Lebanon's Christian neighborhoods, which for long months were out of gasoline and other necessities.

back for Soviet

in Lebanon Underlines Loss of Its Influence in Mideast

By CHRISTOPHER S. WREN
Special to The New York Times

June 11—The Soviet Union does not really know which fortunes in the way to move on Lebanon. They further infer that the Russians have not had any success so far through private diplomatic channels and may feel betrayed by Arab allies in whom they have invested much.

The Government newspaper, Pravda, said in an editorial this week to assert in front of the Soviet Union was "the true friend of the Arab peoples" and cite its economic and military aid to have been re-

The latest deterioration of Soviet prospects in the Middle East was probably set in motion a year ago after the Russians failed to win a consensus among Arab states that would open the way to a new Middle East peace conference at Geneva. Thereafter, Egypt accepted, against Soviet advice, Secretary of State Henry A. Kissinger's Sinai troop withdrawal agreement with Israel, accelerating Cairo's estrangement from Moscow.

Soviet efforts to encourage the Arab world's ostracism of Egypt after its bilateral deal fell flat. Arab diplomatic sources feel that the Kremlin is now increasingly worried about the erosion of influence with Syria, which has shown its own independence by intervening in Lebanon.

Embarrassment for Kosygin

This was abruptly brought home when Syrian tank columns rolled into Lebanon last week only hours before the Soviet Prime Minister, Alexsei N. Kosygin, arrived in Damascus for an official visit. Well-connected Arab diplomats believe that this not only surprised but also embarrassed Mr. Kosygin.

One sign of Moscow's resentment was the demonstration that several hundred Palestinian and other Arab students later held at the Syrian Embassy. The event could not have come off without the toleration of Soviet authorities.

Moscow's best recourse to boost its image in the Middle East is still a new Geneva peace conference. This would give the Soviet Union, as co-chairman with the United States, a direct voice in the future of the region.

But the purpose for which the Geneva forum was conceived, a lasting peace settlement between Israel and its Arab neighbors, is tangential to the crisis in Lebanon. Moscow's attempts to link the two by darkly attributing "imperialist designs" to both have not been that successful. "If they can't get Geneva going, the Russians are not in the game," remarked one senior European diplomat.

Moscow's setbacks in the Middle East have been softened somewhat by its rising influence in southern Africa and Southeast Asia. The achievement of a workable peace settlement in Lebanon might offer the Soviet Union the chance to regain momentum by insisting on an active role.

But the lack of a clear Soviet stand on Lebanon has confused not only diplomats but apparently even a foreigner that they couldn't figure out what was happening from Soviet press reports. "It's Soviet guns against Soviet guns," decided one man after listening to a foreign radio news broadcast.

SADAT IS HOPEFUL ON BEIRUT ACCORD

In Interview, He Expresses Belief That Rival Groups Can Achieve Settlement

The Washington Star

ALEXANDRIA, Egypt June 11

President Anwar el-Sadat says he believes there is enough common ground among Lebanon's warring factions that a settlement to the 14-month-old war can be found if they sit down for talks with the country's President-elect, Elias Sarkis.

In an interview yesterday, at his summer residence on the Mediterranean, Mr. Sadat predicted confidently: "There will be no difficulty for Sarkis to sit with Arafat and settle everything."

Mr. Sadat had met Yasser Arafat, chairman of the Palestine Liberation Organization, a few hours earlier.

The Egyptian President also said he understood that Kamal Jumblat, the Lebanese left-wing leader, was also ready to negotiate with Mr. Sarkis, who was elected President last month with Syrian backing.

"All the parties concerned are tired now," Mr. Sadat said. "It is time they sit together. I see no difficulty at all."

Sadat Seems Pleased

President Sadat was relaxed and appeared pleased that the hands-off policy he has been urging in Lebanon, leaving it to the local leaders to sit together and work out a new system of government, now seemed likely to be tried.

The Syrian President, Hafez al-Assad agreed on Wednesday to the Arab League's call for a cease-fire, the dispatch of an Arab peacekeeping force and withdrawal of at least some of the 25,000 or so Syrian or Syrian-controlled troops in Lebanon.

Mr. Jumblat and others have accused Syria of seeking control over Lebanon as the first step in a plan in which a Jordanian-Syrian confederation would take over the West Bank of the Jordan from Israel.

Asked about Syria's intentions in Lebanon, Mr. Sadat said: "Believe me, I don't know." But he added "for sure there is something hidden between Syria and Jordan. King Hussein comes behind Syria as a protégé."

"We Smelled a Rat"

Commenting on Washington's disclaimers of any advance knowledge of Syria's invasion, Mr. Sadat said: "Here we smell a rat, as you say, because Syria was encouraged by the United States and look what happened? It has proved a fiasco."

Mr. Sadat said the Arab preoccupation with Lebanon, Syrian disarray and "a very weak Government" in Israel were stalling progress toward peace in the Middle East.

"No one can prophesy what goes on in the Syrian minds," he went on, saying they declared they were for a Geneva conference one day and opposed it the next. "Believe me I don't understand them. I'm for a Geneva conference right now and I don't differ on this with the Soviet Union and the United States."

Asked if he wasn't putting all his eggs in one American basket, Mr. Sadat vehemently denied it, saying, "This is completely wrong." He said he had instructed his Ambassador in Moscow to tell the Russians: "We are very willing for a good friendship, only take us as we are. Just as America, China or Europe takes us."

Cairo Paper Scores Soviet

Special to The New York Times
CAIRO, June 11—Strongly worded criticism of the Soviet Union's role in the crisis in Lebanon and Moscow's recent statement on the Syrian intervention there appeared in a Government-controlled Cairo newspaper today.

Al-Akhar, one of three major dailies here, said a statement issued Wednesday night by Tass, the Soviet press agency, was intended to "spread confusion within the Arab ranks."

The Soviet statement condemned foreign intervention in Lebanon.

The statement's reference to the Syrian intervention was "astonishing," Al-Akhar said, because "everybody knows that Syria is striking the Lebanese and the Palestinians with Russian tanks, missiles and MIG aircraft."

West Germany and Poland

Agree on Annual Meeting

BONN, June 11 (UPI)—West Germany and Poland, in a new act of reconciliation, agreed today that their Foreign Ministers would meet at least once a year.

The agreement was contained in a declaration signed by Chancellor Helmut Schmidt and Edward Gierk, First Secretary of the Polish Communist Party, in a ceremony in the Chancellery.

Agreements on cultural and economic cooperation also were reached. Under a non-governmental economic agreement, a group of West German banks will finance the construction of a $1 billion petrochemical plant in Poland's Katowice area.

Gierk's visit was the first by a First Secretary of the Polish Communist Party to West Germany.

The declaration signed by the two leaders said that the Foreign Ministers would meet annually to discuss bilateral and international matters.

Syria's Lebanon Intervention Said to Cost a Million a Day

Special to The New York Times

WASHINGTON, June 11—American and Israeli officials said today that they believed it was costing Syria as much as $1 million a day to maintain its growing military presence in Lebanon.

In separate conversations, the officials who have been in close contact on the Lebanese crisis said that they understood that the Syrians had asked financial assistance from the Soviet Union to help defray the costs but had been turned down.

The officials also expressed growing doubt privately that the newly established Arab peacekeeping force would be successful in Lebanon in replacing the Syrians.

Although Damascus formally supports the joint force, officials here believe that Syria is prepared to send in more troops and equipment if necessary to impose a cease-fire after more than a week of inconclusive maneuvering inside Lebanon.

American officials, who have generally supported the efforts of the President, Hafez al-Assad, to maintain the political balance in Lebanon between Christians and Moslems, have been growingly worried that his political support from the Baath Party in Syria might erode if a solution is not found shortly in Lebanon.

Mr. Assad is regarded here as a cautious leader, who has gradually moved Syria toward the center of Arab politics from the far left. For that reason, officials have avoided any criticism of Syrian moves, and in fact, some officials would have liked to have publicly given Syria more encouragement in Lebanon.

The Soviet Union is viewed here as having been alarmed and annoyed by the latest developments that have pitted Syrian forces against the Palestinians and provoked the Iraqis to threaten the Syrians. All are supplied with Soviet arms and the events were not encouraged by Moscow, officials said.

It was reported, the officials said, that the Syrians asked the Russians about a month ago for financial assistance in advance of their moves into Lebanon and were turned down. Prime Minister Alexsei N. Kosygin, who last week visited Iraq and Syria, was believed to have been upset at the Syrian moves just as he was arriving in Damascus.

This week the Russians implicitly criticized the Syrian move in a statement on the Lebanese situation.

Quality Clothing for Men Since 1914

bfo OPEN EVERY DAY INCLUDING SUNDAY 9:30-5:30

You don't buy clothing every day... but we do.

Every day we add fresh new, current-season clothing to our stocks, giving you thousands of garments to choose from... all at BFO Miracle Prices. How Come? At our prices the fine clothing on our racks doesn't stay on our racks very long. So we have to replenish our stock all the time. Result: Everything we have is fresh and new—and we have more of it!

How can we offer so much for so little? All it takes is a first-name acquaintance with just about every top-quality maker in the business, formed during our own 60 years of menswear manufacturing experience. Today, when these makers find themselves overstocked or short of cash, who do they call? A friend, naturally. Especially because they know that—with sales volume in the millions—we can absorb thousands of garments at a time instead of a few dozen. So we get a buy—and you get a buy: the cream of the finest manufacturers' current-season clothing at incredibly low prices.

KIM QUILTS IN SEOUL AS OPPOSITION CHIEF

Special to The New York Times

SEOUL, South Korea, June 11—Kim Young Sam stepped down from presidency of the opposition New Democratic Party today, 24 hours after a constitutional body ruled that he was no longer qualified to lead the country's largest opposition in Parliament.

The 58-year-old critic of the government was recently re-elected party president, but his rivals challenged his legitimacy by holding a separate national convention.

Mr. Kim is challenged by a broad coalition of five party leaders who want collective leadership. Contending this is inefficient to cope with the Government of President Park Chung Hee, Mr. Kim had opposed revision of the present one-man party charter.

At a news conference this morning, Mr. Kim obliquely accused the Government for his fall.

"I may be politically removed, but they can't obliterate the party," he said. Lee Chung Hwan, chairman of the party's national convention, was appointed to head the divided opposition.

Re-education Plan Pressed in Vietnam

By BERNARD GWERTZMAN
Special to The New York Times

WASHINGTON, June 11—Fourteen months after they seized power in South Vietnam, the Communist authorities in Saigon have published a decree that seems to tighten controls over former members of the old anti-Communist Government and armed forces.

According to the lengthy document broadcast over Saigon radio and monitored by American officials, virtually all former members of the armed forces, as well as security intelligence and police organizations, "must attend collective re-education courses for three years."

Many of these officials have already been in these camps for most of the past year, and the decree allows them to count that time spent against the three years.

Those who wholeheartedly make efforts in their re-education, achieve real progress, confess their crimes and score merits may be considered for a return to their families sooner than required and for the restoration of their citizenship," the decree said.

But it added that social punishment will be dealt to recalcitrants.

"Those who had committed many crimes against the people and dangerous chief evildoers who incurred many blood debts with the compatriots, who make no significant progress and who still show an unchanged stubborn nature will be brought before the law by the revolutionary administration for appropriate punishment," it said.

The decree said that any former Viet Cong members who defected to the Thieu regime "must report to and attend re-education courses." Depending on the severity of each case, the revolutionary administration will determine the duration of re-education," it said. Those who "truly repent" will be given leniency.

Anyone in hiding to avoid the camps "will be severely punished by law," it said, but anyone who turns "himself in" and confesses his crimes to the revolution will have his crimes reduced.

American officials said today that the latest decree appeared to set the stage for some "war crimes trials" although this was not certain from the decree itself. What did seem clear was that despite the forthcoming Vietnam Governments there was no move to ease up in the gradual tightening of controls. Some officials, in fact, compared the situation to that of North Vietnam in the year after Hanoi in 1954. Steps to wipe out the ideologist opposition grew more intense in the period about a year after the takeover.

The decree suggests that the authorities do not want the former Thieu officers and men, who might be anti-Communist, to be around populated areas. The camps have been variously described by Western experts, but they are believed to be similar to strictly penal colonies in other Communist countries.

The decree allows the former military men who had not done anything harmful to be associated with them to escape re-education." Also the rank-and-file who have been "re-educated" will be allowed to live in peace.

Surveillance to Continue

Skilled technicians, doctors, educators and the like, who were obliged to work for the Thieu regime and whose services are needed now, will be released from camps but must be subject to "on the spot surveillance" for six months to one year before being allowed to enjoy full rights.

But if a person "has not shown any progress in politics and ethics, the head of an organ, unit or branch has the right to dismiss him or her or to extend his or her return to the centralized reformation camp so that he or she can continue to attend the reformation course."

The decree took note of the concern of families of those sent to camps. It said the Government "deeply sympathizes with their anxieties and worries" and again said that families will not be punished for the actions of any individual member.

The South Vietnamese Government, formally known as the Provisional Revolutionary Government, was founded in 1969 during the Vietnam War but now seems about to become defunct.

A joint National Assembly of Hanoi and Saigon is to meet later this month to elect a new, unified Vietnamese Government that will be under the virtual control of Hanoi.

Kissinger Aide Wins Approval From a Divided Senate Panel

By DAVID BINDER
Special to The New York Times

WASHINGTON, June 11—The Senate Foreign Relations Committee voted approval today of the nomination of Harry W. Shlaudeman as Assistant Secretary of State for International Affairs.

The nomination was opposed in the committee by Democrats Dick Clark of Iowa and Joseph R. Biden Jr. of Delaware, who alleged that Mr. Shlaudeman had not been candid about his role as Deputy Chief of Mission in the American Embassy in Chile before the coup that overthrew President Allende Gossens in September 1973.

The committee also received letters from Senator Edward M. Kennedy and Rep. Michael J. Harrington, both Democrats of Massachusetts, opposing the nomination.

But after hearing nearly two hours of testimony by Mr. Shlaudeman, nine Senators approved his nomination. Mr. Clark and Mr. Biden abstained.

Kissinger's Telephone Call

Secretary of State Henry A. Kissinger personally telephoned three Senators last Wednesday, urging speedy action on the nomination of Mr. Shlaudeman and six other senior State Department officials. Mr. Kissinger was in Santiago, Chile, at the time, attending the Organization of American States general assembly.

In addition, Mr. Kissinger sent letters urging action to each of the committee members.

The allegations against Mr. Shlaudeman were first made two years ago by Congressman Harrington following revelations that the Nixon Administration had authorized the Central Intelligence Agency to speed close to $8 million in covert political actions in Chile in support of opponents of the Allende Government.

Mr. Harrington asserted in 1974 and again this spring that Mr. Shlaudeman had deceived the House International Relations Committee about the extent of his knowledge of the C.I.A.'s Chile operations. Others asserted that Mr. Shlaudeman had condoned participation in Santiago embassy personnel in black market currency exchange during the Allende era. In executive session, Mr. Shlaudeman was reported to have testified that he had never denied knowledge of some of the C.I.A. covert operations before the House, but that he could only testify about it in closed session since it dealt with classified matter.

He was also reported to have said that while the United States Embassy may have committed technical violations of currency regulations in Chile, the state of the money market was so turbulent in the Allende era that it was practically impossible for embassy personnel to function without exchanging some money on the unofficial market.

While the committee vote was split on Mr. Shlaudeman, it was unanimous for the six other nominees.

They were Philip C. Habib, to be Under Secretary of State for Political Affairs, William D. Rogers, to be Under Secretary of State for Economic Affairs, Arthur W. Hummel Jr., to be Assistant Secretary of State for East Asian and Pacific Affairs, Viron P. Vaky, to be Ambassador to Venezuela, Robert V. Keeley, to be Ambassador to Mauritius and Joseph Z. Taylor, to be Deputy Inspector General for Foreign Assistance.

The nine Senators who voted were Hugh Scott, Republican of Pennsylvania, Clifford P. Case, Republican of New Jersey, Robert P. Griffin, Republican of Michigan, Jacob K. Javits, Republican of New York, George McGovern, Democrat of South Dakota, James B. Pearson, Republican of Kansas, Claiborne Pell, Democrat of Rhode Island, Charles H. Percy, Republican of Illinois, and John J. Sparkman, Democrat of Alabama.

Executive Runs Italy as 'New Face'

By ALVIN SHUSTER
Special to The New York Times

BRUSSELS, June 11—Defense ministers of the North Atlantic Treaty Organization said after a two-day meeting here that they were concerned about a continuing rise in the military power of the Warsaw Pact but satisfied that the Atlantic alliance was moving toward countering this threat. These views were expressed in a communiqué issued by the defense ministers of all member countries of the alliance except France and Greece, which do not participate in the military side of the organization. The ministers said they were encouraged by the prospect of a substantial increase in United States military spending this year and by reports of force improvements by the various allies.

The atmosphere of the meeting appeared unusually relaxed, with none of the bickering about defense cuts by individual nations that had marked previous meetings. Planned increase in budget Western European ministers expressed satisfaction with both the prospective increase in the American military budget and American plans to station a new army brigade in the northern part of West Germany near Bremen. Previously all American fighting units in West Germany were in the southern part of the country. The Dutch Defense Minister, Henk Vredeling, whose country would directly benefit from this added protection, said the Netherlands was ready to make a financial contribution toward supporting the American brigade. West Germany is already negotiating with the United States over similar support. In another move to enhance defense in this area, Canada announced a $160 million program to modernize its tank forces stationed in West Germany. Various allies also announced aid programs for Portugal and Turkey, which said their tasks inside the alliance exceed their defense spending ability. Secretary of Defense Donald Rumsfeld, who stopped for talks in Lisbon on his way to Brussels, said the United States was helping Portugal to equip and train an army brigade that would be a reserve force at the disposal of the NATO commander in Europe. Radar Decision Postponed Canada and West Germany also said they planned to help the Portuguese, who are trying to reorient their army toward Europe after the long colonial wars in Africa. The ministers put off a decision on an American airborne radar system that would give warning of an attack by low flying planes in Europe and help control battlefield actions. Although the two main European participants in the highly expensive program, West Germany and Britain, expressed continuing support for it, the Germans wanted to put off the spending decision until after their national elections in October. The British, Americans and West Germans did agree however to put up $12 million to keep studies of the project going until December.

Mr. Agnelli's decision to run for the Senate was somewhat of a surprise. His older brother, Giovanni, the chairman of Fiat, had indicated that he himself would run on a ticket backed by three smaller parties, but then he decided to run on his own. His sister, Susanna, is also running for the Senate but for the Republicans, a small party. This week, between talks to halls, visits to homes and strategy meetings with his staff, which includes a 28-year-old campaign manager, Mr. Agnelli went to Turin to resign as managing director of Fiat because of his political career. He will remain as deputy chairman of the company. Just how much impact he will have in bringing change to the Christian Democrats remains to be seen. He has already encountered some problems with party officials, who refused to allow him to run in Turin, where he is well known, and instead offered him the seat in Rome.

NEW TREMORS HIT NORTHEAST ITALY
UDINE, Italy, June 11 (Reuters)—A strong earth tremor, followed by three lesser ones, shook the Friuli area of northeast Italy tonight, but the police said no one was injured. The tremor, which registered force seven on the 12-point Mercalli Scale, brought masonry crashing to the ground to some parts of the area which was devastated by a force nine earthquake on May 6. First police reports said some further damage was caused to buildings already wrecked in Gemona, north of Udine, but there was no immediate word of major destruction. Scientists at the Trieste Geophysical Observatory said the tremors were part of the "normal settling procedure" which follows all major earthquakes. There have been well over 100 tremors of varying intensity since the May 6 earthquake. The 968th victim of that disaster died today of injuries received when her house collapsed.

Trudeau Will Visit Ford On Wednesday for Talks
WASHINGTON, June 11 (AP)—Prime Minister Pierre Elliott Trudeau has accepted an invitation from President Ford to visit Washington next Wednesday for informal talks and a White House dinner. The Prime Minister will use the occasion to present Canada's Bicentennial gift to the United States, a book of photographs on the 5,500-mile frontier between the two countries. The announcement said "during previous meetings the President and Prime Minister had agreed on the utility of periodic informal meetings," and they "look forward to this meeting to continue their discussion of subjects of mutual interest."

NATO VIEWS RISE IN POWER OF EAST

Ministers' Parley Satisfied by Pact's Countermeasures

CYPRUS AIDE SAYS TURKS EXPEL GREEKS
UNITED NATIONS, N.Y., June 11—Foreign Minister John Christophides of Cyprus charged in the Security Council today that thousands of Greek Cypriots were being driven from their villages in areas controlled by Turkish forces in preparation for outright annexation of the territory by Turkey. Mr. Christophides and Nail Atalay, the Turkish Cypriot representative, traded charges as the council began considering a six-month renewal of the United Nations peace force on Cyprus. The international force of 2,900 stands between the quarrelling Greek Cypriots and the Turkish Cypriots, reinforced by thousands of Turkish troops from the mainland. Mr. Christophides insisted that the council must go beyond renewal of the force and call for an end to the expulsions and "colonization" of the Turkish-held areas by settlers from the mainland. Mr. Atalay repeated the Turkish Cypriot position for a federation of the two communities.

F.B.I. Agent Tells of Reports Of Grain Misgraded for Cargill
Special to The New York Times
BATON ROUGE, La., June 11—Inspectors at the grain elevator operated here by Cargill Inc., one of the two largest grain companies in the world, said that Cargill employees had instructed them to misgrade grain for a Federal Bureau of Investigation, agent testified today. The agent, Robert J. Isakson, said in Federal court here that the inspectors had been told to manipulate grades to benefit Cargill—the only one of the three large grain companies that has not been indicted for cheating its customers. Roy Wallace, a Cargill vice president, reached at the company headquarters in Minneapolis, said that the charge that inspectors would perform illegal activities to protect their jobs as "preposterous." He said the inspectors were not employed by Cargill and that their job security could be affected only by their employer, the state grain inspection agency, or by Agricultural Department supervisors. He said that company investigators had "found no cases of bribery connected with grain-handling operations on the Gulf."

Mr. Isakson testified that the five inspectors—all Civil Service employees of the Baton Rouge Post Commission, a state agency—are Chief Inspector Domenic Corrent Jr., Anthony A. Dams, Edward M. Wylie, Charles P. Daigle, and Donald L. Hebert. A sixth inspector, Truman L. May, was also named in the conspiracy charge but has been on vacation and did not appear at the arraignment before Federal District Judge E. Gordon West. Mr. Isakson testified that the five inspectors had told him that they had received a number of bribe offers and had reported these to their supervisor, C. W. Herbert, executive director of the port commission. According to Mr. Isakson's account, when Mr. Herbert declined to take action, the inspectors decided to start taking bribes. The Agriculture Department is considering action to strip the port commission of its authority to inspect grain. The department is also expected to take inspectors' licenses away from the convicted individuals. The five inspectors are the first employees of a state agency to be convicted in the grain inquiry, which has obtained convictions of inspectors who worked for four private agencies in the New Orleans area.

Trudeau Will Visit Ford On Wednesday for Talks
WASHINGTON, June 11 (AP)—Prime Minister Pierre Elliott Trudeau has accepted an invitation from President Ford to visit Washington next Wednesday for informal talks and a White House dinner. The Prime Minister will use the occasion to present Canada's Bicentennial gift to the United States, a book of photographs on the 5,500-mile frontier between the two countries. The announcement said "during previous meetings the President and Prime Minister had agreed on the utility of periodic informal meetings," and they "look forward to this meeting to continue their discussion of subjects of mutual interest."

2 in House Stage Sit-In At Arms Bill Conference

By JOHN W. FINNEY
Special to The New York Times

WASHINGTON, June 11—In not the practice of the House Armed Services Committee. The sit-in began yesterday when Mrs. Schroeder and Mr. Carr appeared unexpectedly for the first meeting of the conference committee in a hearing room of the Senate Appropriations Committee.

Eviction Vote Ignored The House conferees immediately asked that the two leave. When they declined, the House conferees took a vote calling for their eviction—a vote that the two chose to ignore. The question then arose, according to Mrs. Schroeder, of who would evict the two. In the discussion among the House conferees, the point was raised that the House sergeant-at-arms could not intervene because the meeting was on the Senate side of the Capitol. At the same time, the Senate sergeant-at-arms was powerless because he has no authority over House members.

At that point, according to participants, Mr. Hebert, who last year was deposed as chairman of the House committee, left the conference, saying he was "not going to stay in a meeting where illegal members were present." The sit-in was renewed when the conference was reconvened this morning. Mrs. Schroeder and Mr. Carr reappeared, joined for a while by Representative Ronald V. Dellums, Democrat of California, another junior member of the House committee. Mr. Dellums left when the House conferees said his appearance proved their point that a relaxation of the bars on attendance would lead to "overcrowded conditions" in the conference room.

The House conferees adopted a motion by Mr. Stratton calling for the two to leave "in accordance with the rules of the House." The two objected, and the conferees had written interpretation from the House parliamentarian, William Holmes Brown, on what the House rules provided in such a situation. With no business conducted on the military procurement bill, the conferees were adjourned until next Tuesday while the House conferees sought to get a ruling from the House parliamentarian prohibiting the attendance of the two junior members. Mr. Brown told Carl Albert, the Speaker of the House, that a ruling favorable to the House conferees should be given because the two "are just doing it for publicity." "No, we are not," interjected Mrs. Schroeder. "It is a matter of principle to us," she told the speaker.

Senior Members Chosen While some other Congressional committees in recent years have sought to have broad ideological representation on conference committees, the House Armed Services Committee has clung to the tradition of appointing its more senior members, who are inclined to support the Pentagon's position, as conferees. To senior members of the House committee, the sit-in was an unwarranted intrusion upon the traditions and, they contended, the rules of the House. Led by Representative F. Edward Hebert, Democrat of Louisiana, and Representative Samuel S. Stratton, Democrat of upstate New York, the House conferees tried to evict the two junior members, despite the advice of Representative Thomas P. O'Neill Jr., the House majority leader, not to provoke a confrontation. Mr. O'Neill said he had advised Representative Melvin Price, Democrat of Illinois and chairman of the House committee, "I want no confrontation. If they want to sit in on the conference, they should be allowed to sit in, because they are members of the House."

The practice of other Congressional committees has been to let its members sit in as observers on conferences, although they may not have been appointed as conferees. Mr. Stratton, who has ambitions to become chairman of the committee, said, however, that was

MYSTERIOUS ORIENTAL HEALTH SANDALS

MAKE YOU FEEL GREAT ALL OVER

- Stimulates Nerve Points In the Soles of Your Feet
- Renews Your Energy
- Nervous Tensions Disappear

ONLY $399 PAIR

Many wonderful things the Western mind cannot quite understand have come out of the mysterious Orient—music, art, beauty and medical secrets—to name just a few! And now these miraculous Oriental Health Sandals designed to stimulate nerve points in the soles of your feet so that you feel an almost instant renewal of energy all over your body!

Step into a pair when you get home from work when you finish shopping, when you struggle out of bed in the morning. As you walk around, hundreds of tiny rubber fingers leap into action, massaging and stimulating the soles of your feet. You can almost feel weariness and nervous tension slipping away from your body! Then in minutes... maybe 3... maybe 10... a wonderful glow spreads from head to toe, and a fresh, relaxed, renewed you emerges! Your whole body feels better!

Where is your headache? What happened to that backache? Are these the tired aching feet you came home with? You feel so great you could go out dancing... conquer the world! You don't give a fig that the theory behind these sandals has something to do with reflex points in the feet leading to all parts of the body... both the peripheral and central nervous systems... that when these reflex points are stimulated through massage, your whole body feels better. You just know you feel marvelous!

Oriental Health Sandals are 100% safe. Take a relaxing "walk break" as many times during the day as you need to feel better. See that everyone in the family feels great in a pair. They pack great for travel. Too. Come in Women's and Men's sizes. The mysterious Oriental Health Sandal. Slip into a pair—step out of care. Order now. ONLY $399 Pair.

Reagan Push Bid Remaining Delegates

along the route from there to the Howard Johnson Motor Hotel, where the President was meeting delegates, a number of persons waved placards with sentiments that echoed Mr. Reagan's criticism of Mr. Ford's international policies.

One sign referred to Secretary of State Henry A. Kissinger as "the Democrats' secret weapon."

"I can be elected," the President told more than 800 cheering delegates to the state convention. "I can help elect our country's next President."

The President told the audience, composed largely of his own supporters at the meeting, that he was confident he would be the nominee but that the Missouri party could help assure that by making the right decision tomorrow.

A newsletter distributed by the Ford forces underlined the President's contention that a Reagan ticket would produce a "debacle" equal to the landslide loss of Senator Barry Goldwater in the 1964 Presidential election.

The four-page pamphlet, distributed to state convention delegates, called Mr. Ford "the most electable and the best-qualified candidate" for President. It said that Mr. Reagan would lose to Mr. Carter in November "by Goldwater proportions" and that the loss would imperil the re-election of Governor Bond and the Senate candidacy of John Danforth, the Missouri Attorney General.

Watergate Specter Seen

Thomas E. Curtis, the Missouri who was the first chairman of the Federal Election Commission, distributed a statement on behalf of Mr. Reagan that charged Mr. Ford's Missouri allies with trying to eliminate one-fourth of Mr. Reagan's supporters at the state convention in a credentials challenge.

Mr. Curtis said the challenge was "motivated by the desire of the Ford camp to obtain an unfair political advantage" and was a tactic symbolizing "the essence of Watergate."

Mr. Ford and Mr. Reagan are expected to wage similar battles, in person and through their advocates, in the state conventions scheduled in Iowa, Washington, Delaware, Minnesota, Montana, New Mexico, Colorado, North Dakota, Connecticut and Utah in the next six weeks.

Whits House officials confirmed, meantime, that Senator Robert P. Griffin of Michigan had agreed to be Mr. Ford's floor manager at the Republican National Convention. Mr. Griffin will replace Senator Tower, who withdrew yesterday because the Reagan sweep of all 100 Texas delegates would reduce his access to the convention floor.

SENATE UNIT VOTES CAPITAL GAINS CUT

WASHINGTON, June 11 (AP)—Voting figures from the Senate Finance Committee detail the extent to which their candidate must attract voters from outside the party to retain the White House.

In 28 states where both parties held Presidential primaries, 25.2 million votes were cast and 61.4 percent went to Democratic candidates.

Only in Idaho, Indiana, Michigan, Nebraska and South Dakota did the Republicans poll more votes than the Democrats.

The committee also made changes in the estate tax that would eliminate these taxes entirely for more than half of those who would have to pay them under present law.

These actions, plus dozens of others, were approved as the committee moved toward finishing the tax bill that it has worked on for the last several months.

The measure contains several dozen major provisions, which have a broad impact on businesses and individuals, and hundreds of minor ones dealing with the tax problems of a single business or industry or type of income.

The addition of the capital gains proposal seemed certain to anger even further a group of 14 senators who said yesterday they would try to eliminate or amend major sections of the bill that they regard as overly helpful to business and the wealthy or ungenerous to low- and middle-income individuals.

The measure, even as it stood yesterday, was attacked by Senator Edward M. Kennedy, Democrat of Massachusetts, as "a fraud on the name of tax reform." Senator Charles McC. Mathias of Maryland, one of the two Republicans in the group of 14, said the measure could break the back of the middle-class taxpayer.

Extended Debate Expected

The bill is scheduled to go to the Senate floor next week, and debate could go on for two or three weeks.

In view of the length and complexity of the measure, it appears increasingly doubtful that Congress can complete final action before it recesses for the Fourth of July holiday and the Democratic National Convention.

If the full bill cannot be passed, Congress will be confronted with a decision over what to do about the individual and corporate income tax cuts that were voted last year to combat the recession. They will expire June 30, if no action is taken to extend them, indi-

Primaries Show G. O. P. Needs Outside Aid to Win Presidency

More Democrats voted than Republicans in balloting for delegates in New York, Texas and Alabama, but Presidential candidates themselves were not on those ballots.

Democrats also held popularity primaries in Arizona and Connecticut and a delegate primary in Louisiana, three states where Republicans pick their delegates by the convention or caucus system.

The heavier Democratic vote reflects the tendency of voters to more often identify themselves as Democrats than as Republicans. From state to state, however, the interpretations can vary along with differing state laws on who can vote in a primary.

In Michigan, for example, voters do not register by party and can ballot in either primary. There, Mr. Ford's home-state advantage apparently helped turn out a heavy Republican vote, whereas in the 1972 primaries, the Democratic contest drew the bulk of voters.

changes in the law that would deal with a problem that has caused considerable rural agitation. That is the issue of how farms are to be valued for estate tax purposes.

The House Ways and Means Committee is working on what may turn out to be a much more comprehensive reform of the estate and gift tax laws and may balk at accepting this more limited change that has been proposed by the Finance Committee. On the other hand, members of Congress are feeling tremendous pressure from farmers and others to make just the sort of change that the Finance Committee approved.

Among the other broad provisions adopted by the committee was a new version of a perennial proposal that parents who are paying tuition for college or vocational education for their children receive a tax break. The committee approved a tax credit of $100 starting in 1977, which would rise to $250 in $50 stages over the following three years.

The committee also approved an increase, for 1977 only, in the minimum standard deduction from $1,700 for single individuals and $2,100 for joint tax returns to $1,850 and $2,400.

This provision was inserted as a means of making sure that low-income individuals would not have to pay higher taxes in 1977 when the $35-a-person special tax credit expires, as it would under another section of the bill.

The committee did not want to continue the $35 credit indefinitely, because of the revenue loss involved.

Fashion: In the Heat, Anything Goes, If It's Cool

By BERNADINE MORRIS

Miniskirts are fading away and the ranks of blue jeans, which once presented a solid phalanx, are being decimated. The ones that pass on the street are not battered, patched and embroidered with love as they were a while back — they're just pants.

So what's a woman to wear in the city when the temperature hits 90 degrees and stays there for days? Well, if she's still crazy about blue denim, she can recycle it as a skirt or culottes.

Miriam Fitzpatrick, hurrying past Bloomingdale's yesterday morning, was wearing a denim jumper over a T-shirt.

"I usually wear dungarees," she said. "But I just bought this the other day, and it's cooler."

On her way to the Museum of Modern Art, Laurie Strough of Long Island Lutheran High School, observed that her blue denim culottes felt more comfortable than jeans "because they let my legs breathe."

Ignores 'Torn Blue Jean School'

And Gail Zawadzki, waiting for her sister so they could go shopping, explained that though she never belonged to the "torn blue jeans school," she often wore pants. A student at City College, she said the wrapped denim skirt she was wearing with a T-shirt was "just as informal and almost air-conditioned."

Gunilla Bulow's denims were in the form of pants by Yves Saint Laurent. The stewardess for Scandinavian Airlines System, like almost every woman interviewed around noon as they were strolling, shopping or doing lunch hour errands, was enthusiastic about the state of fashion today.

"Clothes are comfortable, there's nothing special you have to wear, you can find your own style," she said.

Veran Steckel, rather formally dressed in a white cotton Calvin Klein jacket, pink T-shirt and black pants, went even further.

"Clothes are better this year than ever," said the visitor from El Paso, Tex. "They're simple, wearable, and you can take last year's pants and add a new top and feel great."

Another Texas visitor, strolling past Bendel's in a loose white silk dress by Chloé, observed she didn't find New York's tropical heat debilitating.

Weather No Problem to Her

On her way to Montreal, the Texan, Betty Hardy, said, "This is the kind of weather we have every day in Houston — you just have to know how to dress for it."

Like Mrs. Hardy, a number of New Yorkers found dresses the coolest solution, especially when the tops were bare and the skirts full.

Vicki Greene, whose striped dress had a shirred elastic top, said she didn't "like the feeling of pants in summer."

"Pants are hot," said Meg Wynn Owen, in a white shirtdress with a handpainted scarf around the waist. "It's as comfortable as a bathing suit," said Susie Sullivan, of her knitted sundress with a tank top and elasticized waistline.

"I used to wear jeans, but now I like to be feminine," said Lois Amendola, a publicity agent for rock groups, whose bare-top two-piece pink dress was from Bendel's.

Last year's uniform, the T-shirt and wrapped flowered skirt, is still extant, and looks good accessorized with a simple gold chain and espadrilles. Mary Druschek, who works at Pierre Michel, the hairdresser, updated the look with a crisp pink cotton skirt and white embroidered T-shirt that looked as cool as the summer dresses for which American women were known decades ago.

Is Generation Gap Narrowing?

As opposed to recent seasons when young people dressed one way and their elders got along as best they could, the generation gap has narrowed, if not disappeared. Shopping teams of 50-ish mothers and 20-ish daughters wore similar navy blue T-shirts and white pants, for example.

Lois Gartenberg picked a red striped T-shirt and denim pants and so did her daughter, Julie, 13, but then Julie always wears jeans. "We didn't plan to look alike — it just happened," said Mrs. Gartenberg.

Lois Rounick, in her khaki outfit from Alexander's, ended up looking like her five-year-old son, Christopher, in his khaki jumpsuit. This too was an accident.

"We're on our way to Southampton, and I packed everything else," Mrs. Rounick said.

History's Invisible Women

By GENE I. MAEROFF

Special to The New York Times

BRYN MAWR, Pa., June 11

In the program for the Berkshire Conference on the History of Women, which ended here today, the name of Freda Kirchwey, the late editor of The Nation who was the subject of a lecture on "Historical Invisibility in Prominent Women," is misspelled.

This lack of familiarity with Freda Kirchwey, even on the part of scholars attending this conference, points to a crucial aspect of the term "invisibility," Sara Alpern of the University of Maryland said in opening her presentation.

"Among those of us who proofread," Miss Alpern continued, "there should have been a greater familiarity with one of the great women of the recent past than this error would suggest."

The problem of invisibility is one that plagues historians trying to re-examine the past from a perspective that takes account of the fact that half of the participants in the making of history were women.

Fewer Records

Often, women simply were ignored in the accounts of the times and their roles have tended to be obscure or altogether unknown to those who delve into the usual source materials.

"Women have left fewer accessible records, and they don't fit into the frameworks that male historians have established for understanding history," said Dr. Julie Roy Jeffrey of Goucher College in Baltimore.

Most of the 1,200 historians, all but 100 of them female, who gathered for the three-day meeting sponsored by Bryn Mawr College are concerned with trying to find new methods for viewing the past in a way that sheds understanding on the lives and day-to-day activities of women.

en, both the famous and the ordinary. The task is not easy, they say.

"You can't get at the life of a working-class woman in a textile factory in northern Italy by the diary she left because she didn't leave one," said Dr. Sandi E. Cooper of the City University of New York's Richmond College.

The history of women is a vital element to the burgeoning new field of women's studies, which cuts across the disciplines, but ultimately relies heavily on the contributions of historians.

And, conversely, those working in the area of women's history say that women's studies and the concern about consciousness raising are helping pose unconventional questions about the past.

157 Papers

Some of these lines of inquiry were demonstrated in the themes of the 157 papers delivered at the conference.

Among the subjects were morality among Roman women, the flight of women from antebellum homesteads, feminism and revolution in 19th Century Russia, working women between the World Wars, misogyny in the Third Reich, the legal position of women in the high Middle Ages and women in trade unions.

Discussions were lively, well attended and almost always polite. A spirit of goodwill pervaded Bryn Mawr's gothic campus, one of the most beautiful in the East. Most of the participants were college teachers and some were doctoral candidates in a field in which they know the job market cult at best.

The picture history that conference was rapidly evolving has moved beyond simply provoking accounts of past stories.

Historians of women are sociological and cultural dimensions, experience and that shaped women and, previously unknown, that women's history.

Dr. Leslie M. University of Dearborn found the 1940's it was poverty wages raising them that women would or remain living parents.

Dr. Lella Mawr found the image the Nazi women as mer the actual pe Third Reich shifted as ecotions changed I.

Dr. Sylvia M. that in Mexico, 1800's divorce by a women's not a man's, w of the suits women.

"By giving history," said I Keller of San College in Ca may be able to we have not achieve other making the str what it ought:

Old Bottles Into New Lamps

By RUTH ROBINSON

Old bottles fascinate Susan Mayer, an art director with a pharmaceutical advertising agency. She couldn't resist a crate of 250 of the grimy old things, made in Paris by Durrfort for Williams & Hogg, chemists in North Shields, England, and used over and over again from 1900 through World War II to dispense lemonade, orangeade and ginger beer to thirsty Britons.

Once the grime had been removed by a thorough soaking in the bathtub, the bottles emerged gleaming amber and peacock blue in color, the very thing, decided Miss Mayer and Dr. Edward Kosinski, a physician friend, for lamps. So there they are, eight different styles of bottles, converted into 20-inch table lamps with antiqued brass bases and finials. Particularly effective are those with a swirly pattern inside or with "Zephyr Table Waters" and the like etched on the surface. Original paper labels add authenticity.

The lamps, easily identified by the Clair de Lune label, sell for $75 complete with white pleated shades at Vito Gallo Antiques, 864 Lexington Avenue near 65th Street;

Bob Pryor Antiques, 1023 Lexington Avenue near 73d Street, and Stanley Kingdom Antiques, 415 East 53d Street.

The bright placemats recently added, along with notepaper, to the UNICEF collection of cards and gifts would encourage any child to eat up his or her cereal. The set of four polyethylene mats gives a child's eye view of celebrations around the world. There is Halloween by 9-year-old Mark Johnson of the United States, the Festival of the Sardine by Gema Sanchez Lopez, 12, of Spain; a Romanian harvest scene as envisioned by 11-year-old Mihaela Toma, and from Canada a Christmas procession by Mark Coté, 11, showing statues of the Holy Family borne aloft by youngsters in white robes.

The notepaper—in a sophisticated sand color with a "Cool Day" motif, resembling a seascape or landscape—is by an adult artist, Holley Flagg. A portfolio containing 12 notecards, 13 decorated and 7 plain stationery sheets and 25 color-coordinated envelopes can be obtained from the UNICEF counter at the United Nations or the United States Committee for UNICEF, 331 East 38th Street, for $6. The placemats can be bought there for $5 a set. The current catalog is also available at committee headquarters.

Robert Schulenberg uses almost any fabric that takes his fancy for the accessories he refers to, for want of a better name, as "soft jewelry." Such things as Indonesian batik, gingham, Liberty prints and terrycloth in pastel colors give a cool look to the sausage-like chokers and bracelets that are likely to be popular around town, and at the beach this summer.

The practical washable ornaments, really just tubes of bias-cut material over cord, come plain or adorned with love knots that can be loosened or tightened to insure proper fit. They close with snap fasteners; thus, two bracelets, preferably contrasting ones, can be joined to form a choker. Mr. Schulenberg's bracelets sell for $4 and $5.50, his chokers for $8 and belts in similar vein for $10 at Sharon Buvard, Madison Avenue at 83d Street and at the new boutique, 801 Madison Ltd., between 67th and 68th Streets.

Queen Elizabeth Issues Honors

Queen Elizabeth II issued her annual birthday honors list yesterday, and notable on it were Benjamin Britten, composer, and Barbara Ward, the writer and lecturer on economics and ecology. Both were made life peers.

ward Weinfeld dismissed a damage suit brought by Carl Friedan, former husband of the feminist writer, Betty Friedan, charging that his name and picture had been used without his permission in a New York magazine article written by the women's activist. Mr. Friedan said that the article, which described Mrs. Friedan's married life in 1949, included snapshots of him.

Perry County is 65 percent black, yet the jury was all-white. Questions were raised about its selection, and on appeal, Circuit Court Judge Edgar Russell Jr. voided the verdict.

Carrie Lee Jackson, a 340-pound housewife turned professional wrestler, was ordered by a Nashville judge to "keep her chair breaking and bed breaking relegated to the wrestling ring." Mrs. Jackson, known as "Big Tussie," appeared before Judge Hamilton Gayden after she allegedly had refused to leave a motel, where she broke beds and a chair in two rooms by nonviolent means—lying and sitting on them.

Dr. Bobby C. Merkle, of Uniontown, Ala., near Selma, will have to stand trial again on charges that he removed fresh stitches from the arm of a black youth after learning the patient could not pay the $25 bill. An all-white jury awarded Melvix Armstrong, 14 years old, $20 in damages, though he and his father had asked for $50,000.

When Daniel Patrick Moynihan began to deliver the commencement address at Ohio State University in Columbus yesterday, 10 graduates walked out and 25 others stood and turned their backs to him. Two minutes into the address of the former United States representative to the United Nations and recently announced Democratic senatorial candidate in New York, about 50 spectators marched out of Ohio Stadium in single file.

Marie Biaggi, wife of Representative Marie Biaggi, Democrat of the Bronx, was a robbery victim yesterday. She told the police that as she stepped into the elevator of the Biaggi apartment building on Moshulu Parkway South in the Bronx, she encountered a man with a knife who demanded money. She handed over $60 from her purse, and the man fled.

Sam Coleman, a black man who received a $1,000 reward from the Ku Klux Klan for helping identify members of a gang that had been terrorizing residents of central Florida, said that he was going to give most of the money to his girl friend and put the balance in his bank account. Mr. Coleman of Lakeland, Fla., accepted the money from John Paul Rogers, grand dragon of the United Klan of Florida, despite threats made on his life after the Klan said that he would receive the reward.

Judith R. Friedberg Becomes Bride

Judith Rubin Friedberg of New York, daughter of Dr. and Mrs. Irving I. Rubin of Pittsfield, Mass., and Hallandale, Fla., was married yesterday evening to David Mark Richman, son of Mr. and Mrs. Joseph Richman of New York. Rabbi Charles G. Agin performed the ceremony at the Carlyle.

The bride, a graduate of Berkshire County Day School in Lenox, Mass., and Miss Hall's School, holds an associate degree from Finch College and a bachelor's degree from New York University. She is reading for the New York State bar with the law firm of Glickman, Glickman & Glickman. Her previous marriage was terminated by divorce.

C., and general counsel to Sealant Terminal Corporation and its affiliates in Bayonne, N. J. He is a former Special Assistant Attorney General for the state of New York and a legislative counsel to State Senator Roy M. Goodman.

The bridegroom's father is president of Dan Leslie Fashions Inc., dress manufacturers.

Miss Bayne Wed To Bruce Bayne, Diocese Deacon

In the Cathedral of St. John the Divine yesterday afternoon, Sarah Bayne, daughter of Edward Ashley Bayne of Rome and Martha Collins Johnson of West Caldwell, N. J., was married to the Rev. Bruce George Cuthbert Bayne, son of Mrs. Stephen F. Bayne Jr. of Seattle and the late Bishop Bayne.

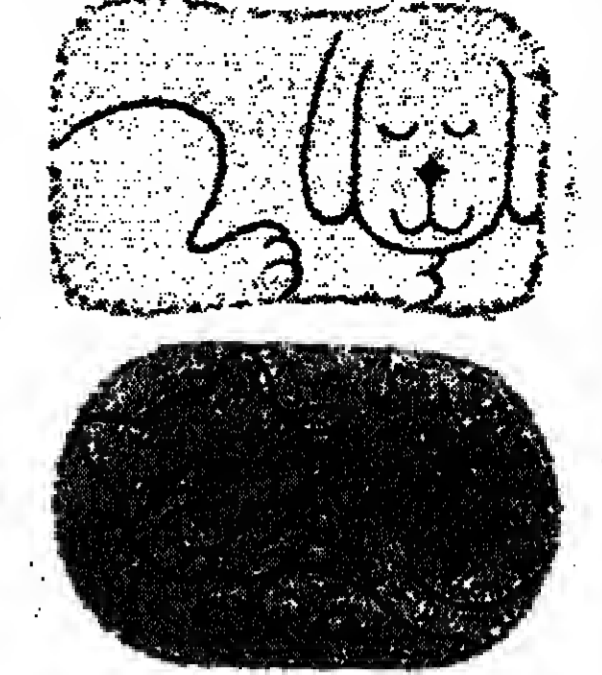

The bride's father, director of the Center for Mediterranean Studies in Rome, is the brother of the bridegroom's father, who was Bishop of the Episcopal Diocese of Olympia (Wash.) from 1947 to 1960.

Canon Edward N. West performed the ceremony. The eucharist was celebrated by the Very Rev. Harvey H. Guthrie Jr., dean of the Episcopal Divinity School in Cambridge, Mass., assisted by the Venerable Samuel B. Bird Jr., Bishop Paul Moore Jr. of New York gave the blessing.

Mrs. Bayne, a graduate of Sarah Lawrence College, class of '63, received an M.A. degree in history from Columbia University and has been teaching at the Shady Hill School in Cambridge, Mass. Her mother is a learning disabilities specialist and former headmistress of the Brookline School in Montclair, N. J.

The bridegroom, who graduated from St. Paul's School in Concord, N. H., and from Amherst College, received a Master of Divinity degree last year from the Episcopal Divinity School. He is a deacon in the Diocese of New York.

Henry Fonda, 71, Talks of Life and Art

HENRY FONDA is leaner than ever. His blue eyes are as bright as when he was 30, and his 71-year-old body is still in the prime of life. He is still acting, still directing, still producing, still teaching, still mentoring, still giving. He is still the Henry Fonda that we all love and admire.

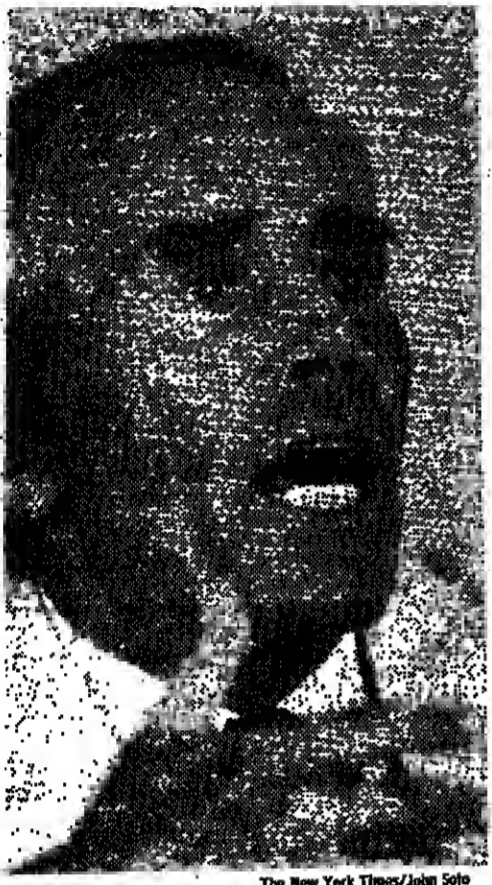

There's not a word of truth to the cancer business. And it also has nothing to do with my heart or with the Pace-maker I had put in two years ago.

Mr. Fonda's most recent film, "Midway," in which he plays Admiral Nimitz, is, according to his count, his 96th picture, and he speaks approvingly of it as "an exciting, old-fashioned war picture."

"Admiral Nimitz was not a hard role for me to play. I met him several times when I was in the Navy. I knew him as soft-spoken, gentle and kind—the kind of man I am. I'm quiet and easy."

Forgettable Films

He was not so gentle about some of his past roles, most of which, he said, he'd prefer to forget. After making "The Grapes of Wrath" at 20th Century-Fox in 1940, he spent several years there, directing a series of the most forgettable films in the world. I didn't do another picture I was proud of at that studio until "The Ox-Bow Incident."

The bad ones were, however, balanced by enough good films to make him think he has been on the whole, very lucky. "My Darling Clementine" was one of the best westerns ever made," he said. "Twelve Angry Men" was a minor classic and I'm proud of it on two levels, as the only picture I ever produced, and as an actor."

"The Best Man," a film about political-convention fighting made in 1954, was brought to mind because I saw it on television not too long ago. When it came on, "I got booked," said Mr. Fonda, whose part in the film was drawn up in the late Adlai E. Stevenson. "I watched it like it was all new to me. I could remember the scenes. But it's still one of the best political films ever made."

A lifelong Democrat—"I realize how lucky I am that I grew up in a Republican stronghold like Omaha, and that my father was one of the few liberal Democrats. When you are a boy, you think the way your father thinks"—Mr. Fonda said he had always been political, "but I've kept a low profile. I'm not an activist as Jane is. She's an extrovert and I'm an introvert."

Primary Activity

However, he said, his activity preceding the California primary on behalf of Jane's husband, Tom Hayden (who was defeated for the Democratic nomination for the United States Senate by the incumbent, John Tunney), was not unusual. "I've been interested in politics back to Roosevelt, but I didn't do much until Stevenson. I talked to John Steinbeck then; he couldn't make speeches, but he could write them, and I couldn't write them, but I could read them. So he wrote and I read."

"I wasn't very active, but I was active and I cared," he continued. "I remember sitting on the floor and watching the election returns and crying. Since then I've been almost that much involved with every Democrat who's run. I was sort of on the back burner during McGovern. I was for Muskie and, when he didn't make it, it sort of discouraged me." Actors have been criticized for political involvement, but he believes there is no reason that they shouldn't become political. His daughter's activism hasn't hurt her career, he said, although it may occasionally have been inconvenient. "It all happened so fast," he recalled. "Jane was a butterfly, married to Roger Vadim, doing sex films. Then she came home and lived with us and went into activities involving the Indians, the G.I.'s, the Black Panthers . . . so fast I said, 'Darling, you are not helping your cause, you are turning people off,' and she said she knew she was making mistakes, but she was learning every day. She did say things that were unfortunate, and that she regretted later, but it was an exuberance, a naïveté."

Declaring himself "in absolute shock" over the permissiveness in current movies, Mr. Fonda said that he had originally turned down pictures like "Sex and the Single Girl." But "my agent called and said to get over there. They told me: 'We have to give you the facts of life. You can't make a career out of "Twelve Angry Men," "The Grapes of Wrath," "The Ox-Bow Incident." You'll be out of business.'"

"I listened to them and went ahead. 'Sex and the Single Girl' was a dreadful picture, but big box office. So were others. As a result, I'm still considered box office and I wouldn't be if I had limited myself to the kind of pictures I want to make."

The one role he has always regretted not playing started out on stage and was later translated to film. "I'd like to have played George in 'Who's Afraid of Virginia Woolf?'" he said. "Albee wrote the script and sent it to my agent who said, 'This character isn't for my Hank,' and sent it back. I saw the play and raved about it, and then my agent told me he had turned it down. I was thought of when they were casting the film, but Mike Nichols chose Richard [Burton]."

Regretful but still optimistic, he added, "I still think it's a great part and I'd still like to play it one day, if I'm not too old."

'Jackson County Jail,' Fine Melodrama By Yvette Mimieux, on Local Screens

BY JACKSON COUNTY JAIL, directed by Donald Miller and written by Donald Miller and Roger Corman, is a fine, tough little melodrama called "Jackson County Jail," which opened yesterday at the Embassy 49th Street and at other theaters in New York.

It isn't the film's very dismal view of Bicentennial America that gives "Jackson County Jail" its vigor. The film lays on the irony and hypocrisy so heavily that it sometimes seems to be the work of especially snobbish film makers, people who think that everything between Los Angeles and New York is the boon-docks.

"Jackson County Jail" is film making of relentless energy and harrowing excitement that recall the agit-prop melodramas of the 30's. It's not exactly in a class with Lang's "You Only Live Once," but it possesses the kind of fury that can breathe life into a melodrama even when the point of view is simple-minded.

The film was directed by Michael Miller and written by Donald Miller, neither of whom I'd heard of before. Roger Corman, sometimes known as the king of the B's, was the executive producer, and it has the drive, movement and economy of narrative that are the marks of clear of sentimentality of the conventional sort, though when the hijacker, nicely played by Tommy Lee Jones, says with a shrug just before the final shoot-out, "I was born dead anyway," it's dealing in its own sort of sentimentality.

Yvette Mimieux

Miss Mimieux is excellent in a role that subjects her to as many bruises, humiliations and indignities as she might get in the boxing ring. All of the performances are fine and to the point. I hesitate to say too much, thus to oversell a movie that is best come upon without great expectations. I would suspect that Mr. Miller and Mr. Stewart are new film makers to watch.

DOVE WKCR-FM 333 Bowery, between Second and Third Streets. This year's fifth roundup, with an assembly of 41 performers in 11 short offerings, is continuing until June 27, with different groups of plays rotating Wednesday, Thursday and Friday at 8 P.M. and Sunday at 4 P.M. Admission is $2.50.

But the real bargain, which also requires some stamina, is the regular Saturday night runoff of the entire festival program—a marathon show starting at 6 P.M. and lasting until about 1 A.M.

The WPA management is understanding. As happened last season, you can drift out for coffee, snacks or a meal nearby (eataries are close) and return at any time; those brief intermissions won't be quite enough for such a long stretch.

Last year at the Saturday sessions, sizable audiences remained to sip coffee, munch and watch the parade of hurging talent in acting, directing and playwrighting.

POTPOURRI Along with its programs in drama, dance and film, the Henry Street Playhouse, 466 Grand Street, is also featuring classical-music programs as weekend diversions on the lower East side area. Tomorrow's free concert at 4 P.M. will be a program of Mozart, Handel, Grieg, Bartók and Williams played by the Henry Street Symphony under the baton of Paul West and featuring faculty members of the Henry Street Music School as piano and cello soloists.

Tony Towle and Frederick Bauman will read from their writings in the free poetry program tomorrow at 4 P.M. at St. Luke's Episcopal Church at Hudson and Grove Streets.

The annual block party takes place today from noon to dusk in front of Greenwich House, the social settlement center at 27 Barrow Street, below Sheridan Square. The festivities will spill forth in carnival spirit along Barrow between Seventh Avenue and Fourth Street, with clowns, jugglers, country-singing by Harry Robbing and other entertainment mixing with a bazaar of crafts, catch-alls and foods. Proceeds go to the Child Care Center of Greenwich House.

Matlack's Role: Nettles Belts 2 Mets' Stopper in 7-5 Victory

By PAUL L. MONTGOMERY
Special to The New York Times

SAN FRANCISCO, June 11—This may be the year for Jon Matlack and his darting fastball, which many opposing batters call the liveliest in the National League.

The 26-year-old New York Met left-hander has been a paragon on consistency in what has been a depressing start for the team. Last night in San Diego, Matlack did it again, shutting out the Padres on five hits to halt a four-game losing streak. The 6-0 victory was Matlack's seventh of the season against one defeat.

The pitcher gave full credit to the help of his teammates for the victory. "I've always maintained that you're only as good as the circumstances and the club around you," said Matlack. "You can't do it yourself except once in a rare while."

The help he received last night included Dave Kingman's 22d home run of the season, and Bud Harrelson's return to shortstop after a 14-game absence. Harrelson, who hurt his right leg in a collision at home plate late last month, contrived two hits, two runs batted in and an anchor for the Mets infield.

The Mets have lost 15 of their last 20 games, and Matlack's 3-1 win-loss record in that span is the only winning one on the staff. Of the others, Tom Seaver and Jerry Koosman were 1-2, Mickey Lolich was 0-3, Craig Swan was 0-4 and the hull pen was 0-3.

Bert Blyleven, who tripled his pay recently in baseball's money revolution, shot for the 100th victory of his career last night in Yankee Stadium. But he was followed when the steaming Yankees rallied with three runs in the eighth inning on home runs by Roy White and Craig Nettles and defeated the Texas Rangers, 7-5.

The home run by Nettles was his second of the night off Blyleven, and it gave the third baseman a total of five runs batted in. It also gave Blyleven his second straight loss in a Texas uniform and fastened the Yankees' grip on first place in the American League East.

The Rangers replaced the California Angels in the Stadium cast, but that wasn't the reason the Yankees were steaming. They were upset because the same umpiring crew was on hand, and the Yankees were concentrating more fire these days on the umpires than on the Boston Red Sox.

"Incompetent," stormed Billy Martin, the Yankees manager, who was ejected by Larry McCoy from Wednesday night's game. "Awful," railed Thurman Munson, the catcher, who was ejected Thursday night by McCoy. "Each day is a day," replied McCoy, who quit his job as a real estate salesman 10 years ago to enlist in the baseball wars.

McCoy was umpiring at third base last night as the Texans arrived, but the Yankees had a more immediate worry: Blyleven, who went from $65,000-a-year rags to $180,000-a-year rices two Continued on Page 16, Column 1

er, Dent Tied for Lead With 136's

L.C., June 11—Another four-under-par 68 that gave him a two-round total of 136, eight under par.

The 24-year-old Putter, who led through three rounds in Philadelphia last week, matched that effort late in the hot, humid, hazy afternoon while thunder rumbled in the distance and play again appeared in jeopardy.

"I honestly don't understand it," said Putter, who had never even come close before his sudden challenges of the last two weeks.

"I was off for three weeks before Philadelphia. I just kind of figured out I've got to keep it in the fairway more than I'd been doing. So I've been going to the 3-wood more, playing more position golf. I'm thinking better."

And his putter was no drawback. He chipped in once, missed eight greens, saved par on six of them and one-putted eight times. He used only 26 strokes on the greens.

Charles Coody, a former Masters winner who hasn't made a bogey in the tournament, Mark Hayes and Gary Groh were next at 138. Coody shot a 70. Both Groh and Hayes, who won the Byron Nelson Classic a month ago, had 69's.

The group at 139 included Mason Rodolph, Lon Hinkle, Joe Inman, Roger Maltbie and Homero Blancas. Rodolph went from a 66 to a 73, Maltbie and Inman shot 69's and Blancas had a 67. Hinkle, one of those stranded by the storm, came back this morning and played his last nine holes in a brilliant 29, carding a 65 for the first 18, and then played the second round in 76.

Ray Floyd, the Masters champion and winner here last year, shot a 67 and was well positioned at 140, only four strokes off the pace.

"I'm playing very, very well," Floyd said.

Arnold Palmer had a 70, placing him well back at 144.

McNair, Stewart Triumph

By FRED TUPPER
Special to The New York Times

Paris, June 11—Celebrating a year of partnership, Fred McNair and Sherwood Stewart defeated what has been the world's best team of Brian Gottfried and Raul Ramirez, 7-6, 6-3, 6-1, today to win the doubles title in the French open tennis championships.

A bit slow to get started, the winners trailed, 1-5, in the first-set tiebreaker before finding sudden inspiration. They took 4 points in a row and then a Gottfried smash found them down at set point. Gottfried served to McNair and as Ramirez cut across the court to intercept, McNair put a shot down the alley for the apparent winner. However, there was a late call of let and, like an old movie, they ran the reel again. Ramirez cut to the middle, McNair's backhand scooted away to tie it at 6-6. Ramirez netted the next point, and McNair then smashed for the set.

Confident now, they dominated the court, breaking Ramirez's service twice to 2-2 and 5-3. It was McNair, from Chevy Chase, Md., who put away the winning smash for the second set. The third was routine. Everything they hit went in and Ramirez sav- ing himself for his semifinal match tomorrow with Harold Solomon (Eddie Dibbs will play Adriano Panatta in the other semifinal), was hardly in high gear.

Miss Barker's Forehand

A year ago Ramirez of Mexico and Gottfried won the world doubles championship and many major tournaments. This year McNair and Stewart, the refugees from Goose Creek, Tex., are properly respectful. "Still the best team in the world," said McNair. "They have, beaten people we haven't, done everything there is to be done. Our immediate aim is to win Wimbledon, and, longterm, to play Davis Cup. Taking one of the 'big four' gives us credibility."

Incongruous as it may seem, McNair leaves tomorrow for a tournament in Nottingham, England, where he must qualify to enter. His world ranking is 141, Stewart's 72. Ramirez is No. 7, Gottfried 21.

The winners divide roughly $10,000 for the title, whereas the women will receive only about $1,750. If Billie Jean King were here, there wouldn't be a head left in the French Federation of Tennis.

In women's singles play today, Sue Barker, a 20-year-old from Devon, England, reached the final by defeating Virginia Ruzici of Rumania, 6-2, 1-6, 6-2, in 78 minutes, taking five games in a row at the end after a shaky performance in the middle. She will meet Renata Tomanova of Czechoslovakia, the winner from Florentina Mihai, another Rumanian, 7-5, 7-6.

Miss Barker has come on quickly this year, bobbing out of comparative obscurity into the quarterfinals of the Virginia Slims championship Continued on Page 17, Column 3

Anderson Orr, Bobby Hull and Jim Norris

Bobby Orr, the only pig in a poke ever worth a dollar, will be skating for the Chicago Black of the Boston Bruins, if he can skate. All in Toronto predict he'll be able to skate on left knee, but only Bobby Orr's left knee. His left knee won't know until training when the Black Hawks will learn if their million investment was worth it. The Irony is Hawks agreed to pay $3 million to Bobby Orr because they wouldn't pay $3 million to Bobby Hull four years ago. Ever since Bobby Hull joined the Winnipeg Jets of the World Hockey Association, the Black Hawks' attendance at Chicago Stadium has gradually increased. Desperate now, the Black Hawks million that Bobby Orr will stimulate ticket investing in Bobby Hull, but their owners, and William Wirtz, didn't realize that. Now the price—$3 million that will be worth it Orr can skate.

Orr must be chuckling. Jim Norris must be in his executive suite in the sky.

ideas ago Jim Norris dominated boxing and polized them, some people thought. He owned the National Boxing Club, which had almost as many as boxers. He also owned the Chicago Black id stock in Madison Square Garden, which w York Rangers, and other members of his the Detroit Red Wings.

the raising of Dan Parker of the Daily Mirror, stood for the Norris House League rather onal Hockey League.

1 Million for Frank Mahovlich before $1 million was the minimum for five- for N.H.L. rookies, Jim Norris offered that nk Mahovlich, then a left wing with the le Leafs. His offer developed in a swirl of rinks in his suite at the Royal York Hotel in the 1962 All-Star Game dinner. Jim Norris urther club owners up for a drink. a million dollars to be able to negotiate with said. "I'd sign him."

what?" said Harold Ballard, then the Maple resident. "You'd give what?"

ard me," Norris said. "I'd give one million gotiate with him. One mill."

"You got a deal," said Ballard, winking at Stafford Smythe, the Maple Leaf president. "He's yours."

Jim Norris took out his money clip. He counted 10 $100 bills and handed them casually to Smythe, who went along with what he thought was a joke. Smythe even pocketed the money, shook hands with Norris and winked at Ballard, who winked back. But the Black Hawks' owner had been serious. Other people might joke about offering $1 million, but Jim Norris was worth about $250 million. He hadn't been joking.

"Call the wire services," Norris told Tommy Ivan, then as now the Black Hawks' general manager. "We got Mahovlich."

Apparently the Maple Leaf owners thought Norris was still joking. But soon the wire services were flashing the news that the Black Hawks had acquired Frank Mahovlich for $1 million. Sports writers quickly phoned Norris to confirm the story.

"You're damn right we bought him," Norris told a newsman. "We paid one million dollars for him."

"Tampering With My Player"

Stafford Smythe suddenly realized that Jim Norris hadn't been joking. He also realized that Toronto fans would not condone the sale of Mahovlich, not even for $1 million. Quickly the Maple Leaf's president matched the phone and spoke to the newsman.

"All this developed at a party here tonight," Smythe said. "I'm not taking this thing seriously."

"You better take it seriously," Norris said. "The check is going to be on your desk tomorrow."

"Well," said Smythe, "if the same offer is made at noon tomorrow, we'll have to consider it."

In the morning Jim Norris signed a check for $1 million. Tommy Ivan delivered it to Smythe, but an hour later the Maple Leafs announced that Frank Mahovlich had signed a four-year contract.

"They can't do that," Jim Norris said. "That's tampering with my player."

But the Maple Leaf's owners, in sober reflection, had never accepted the check for $1 million. They explained that they couldn't sell Frank Mahovlich, that they had a responsibility to the public. And so Jim Norris never got to spend $1 million for Frank Mahovlich; up in his executive suite in the sky he's probably wishing he could be signing the $3 million check for Bobby Orr, but if he had been around four years ago he would have signed a $3 million check for Bobby Hull and the Black Hawks wouldn't need Bobby Orr now.

Monmouth Heats Up the Racing Scene

By MICHAEL STRAUSS
Special to The New York Times

OCEANPORT, N.J., June 11 — A potential shortage of horses rather than of fans seemed to concern officials at Monmouth Park today as a crowd of 14,641—particularly impressive in view of hot, humid weather—turned out for the opening of a 132-day meeting.

There were plenty of thoroughbred and hand this afternoon, a bumper crop of 37 participating in the nine races. Ten engaged in the $28,325 Miss Woodford Stakes, and the six-furlong event was won by John P. Costantino's $23,400-for-$2 Horning Around.

While Monmouth's barns were well-filled today with 1,200 head, and at least 250 more horses are expected, it was the track's future thoroughbred population that Kenneth H. Lennox, the race secretary, was worried about.

A cause for concern is the fact that three thoroughbred tracks, all within 60 miles of one another, are scheduled to operate through the summer. A 100-day meeting opened today at Keystone in Pennsylvania, opposite the New Jersey side of the Delaware. Tomorrow night, an 82-program thoroughbred session starts at Atlantic City, with all but five of the programs being scheduled at night.

I'm certain we'll have no problems for awhile," said Lennox, who has been Monmouth's race secretary since the seaside track opened in 1947. "But as the season progresses, we're sure to have shippings. I'm just wondering whether there will be enough shippings."

Monmouth Park has one advantage over its two nearby competitors. It offers more attractive rewards for horsemen. The smallest purse through the summer will be $4,000.

"Because of our more attractive stakes program, we are certain to have much more quality than have the other two tracks," said Lennox, "but as the season moves on, we may find ourselves hard-pressed to find enough talent for the early races. I can't see horsemen with lower-price claimers shipping here to any expense from either Atlantic City or Keystone. Van bills these days come high."

As for future crowds and handles, Harvey J. Wardell, Monmouth general manager, found reason to be optimistic.

"Last season we ran opposite Atlantic City for more than two months, with both of us offering daytime racing," he said. "That meant we were sharing thoroughbred fans. Since Atlantic City is moving to night racing, our income picture will brighten.

"Add to that the improving over-all national economy and the financial success experienced at the recently-closed meeting in Garden State, racing in general is doing well this season across the country."

Wardell, however, is unhappy that his track is again competing with afternoon harness racing at Freehold, which is only 13 miles from Monmouth.

Based on today's turnout, it appeared that Monmouth's gain—it drew 1,680 more than it did for last year's Tuesday opening—was Freehold's loss. That track attracted only 2,753. On Thursday, with Monmouth still closed, the crowd at Freehold was 3,926.

ATLANTIC CITY, June 11 (AP)—Atlantic City Race

Course begins its night-racing program tomorrow night in a bid to reverse a big drop in attendance and handle last year.

The thoroughbred track will open its 31st season with the six-furlong $25,000-added Premier Handicap, which will be run as the fourth race. It drew a 13-horse field, headed by Penn-Y-Bryn Farm's Honorable Miss, Talc, Our Hero and Double Edge Sword.

Honorable Miss, a mare who has beaten colts before, also is entered against 12 fillies and mares at Monmouth Park in the six-furlong $25,000-added Regret Handicap, but indications are she will start at Atlantic City.

5 Riders in Calder Spill
HALLANDALE, Fla., June 12 (AP)—Five riders were thrown from their horses today in a spill that involved nearly half the field in the second race at Calder Race Course. Four escaped injury, but Jack Fieselman was taken to North Shore Hospital with face and head injuries.

The chain of accidents started when Carefree Carrie, the first mount ever ridden by Gustav Rodriguez, bore out and clipped the heels of Najia as the two horses fought for the lead on a stoppy track.

Carefree Carrie fell and Smart Town and Dove Creek Lass fell over Carefree Carrie. Holly Francis and Amazing Romance then stumbled and unseated their riders.

Cynthia Kirby on Smart Town, Richard DePass on Dove Creek Lass, Joe Capodici on Holly Francis and Rodriguez were driven off the track in a car. Fieselman was taken off on a stretcher.

Lang, 29, is a student here. He was a good junior high school in Hicksville, L.I., he jumped 17 feet 8 inches for a school record, not jump anymore. In 1969, while serving a 1½ year sentence for a burglary in his native New York, he was paralyzed from the chest down.

"I wanted to die," he said. "I always rather'd a wheelchair than die. I got started in wheelchair basketball, and from there I went to track and field, and from there I went to shot-put, javelin and shot-put. I don't get for myself. You see, once you're in it, you don't even think about it."

"I never feel that people are laughing at me when I compete," she said. "But they all tell me how courageous I am, and I don't think I'm courageous at all. I do what I want. I just happen to do it from a chair."

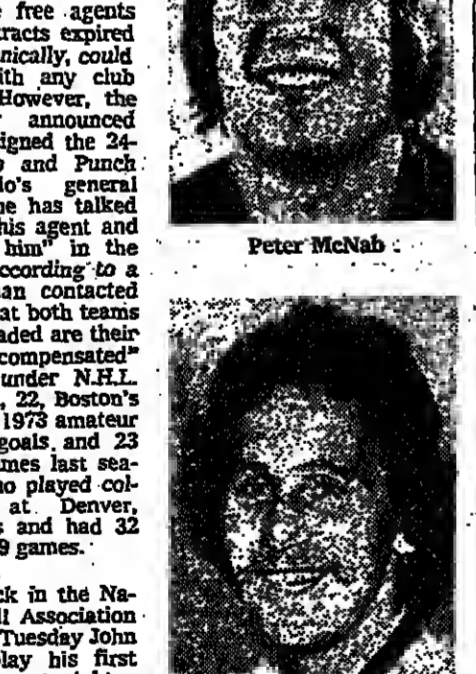

Mikel Stole, 25, came here from Denver, where she is a secretary. She contracted polio at eight months, and can walk only with the aid of crutches and braces. This is her first try at international athletics, and she is competing in swimming and field events. But she has been active in sports for some time, always competing with "A.B.'s"—able-bodied people.

"My family is very sports-minded," she said. "They always wanted me to become involved in sports, and I like them. I don't even really consider myself handicapped. All of us here, we're stouter than the A.B.'s. But we can do what they do. Just give us a little time to catch up, and we'll be there."

Some of the events here include swimming, weight lifting, archery, table tennis, field events and various track distances up to one mile. The athletic and dorm facilities were specifically amended for the handicapped at a cost of about $170,000 to the state. And yet every thing appears to be normal, commonplace to the untrained eye.

Freddie and Bruins de Free Agents

Freddie and the Bruins announced yesterday. The Bruins are signing Peter McNab, their free agent catcher, to a two-year contract. McNab, 24, is a former player for the Los Angeles Angels. He was with the Angels from 1973 to 1975. He was released after the 1975 season. He is expected to join the Bruins in the fall.

Andre Savard is the St. Louis receiver who was traded to the Bruins. He is a former player for the Los Angeles Rams. He was with the Rams from 1973 to 1975. He was released after the 1975 season. He is expected to join the Bruins in the fall.

Pan-Arab Confusion

The Pan-Arab truce supervision force supposed to descend on Lebanon, by decision of the Arab League, could do as much to inflame as to pacify the conflict. Lebanese Christians and Israelis—to say nothing of Syria, the United States and outside powers—have reason to be alert; neither the motives nor the mission of this unprecedented "peacekeeping" force is clear.

The most sanguine assessment is that a broad-based Arab presence would be able to assume the responsibilities previously shouldered by Syria alone, to restore by military intervention enough civil discipline to permit an orderly political evolution among the fighting Lebanese factions. If successful, that would be a striking exercise of international responsibility by leading Arab states. It would, further, rescue Syrian President Assad from an exposed forward position that was threatening his standing in the Arab world and even in his own capital.

Unfortunately, it might not work out that way. The Pan-Arab force is slated to include contingents from Libya and the Palestinians—factions openly sympathetic to the Lebanese leftists—alongside the more moderating influences of Syria and Saudi Arabia. With questions of command and control unclear among the various national interests, there is no way of predicting what this "peacekeeping" force will actually do among the various Lebanese factions.

More ominously, the introduction of outside Arab forces could drastically alter the Israeli defensive position on its northern frontier. A key to the relative tolerance which Israel has shown up to now has been Jerusalem's confidence that the Syrian forces advancing into Lebanon would not turn against Israel. This confidence has arisen out of both tacit and explicit exchanges relayed between Damascus and Jerusalem, plus the impressions relayed by the United States and the United Nations.

As long as the other Arabs keep their presence down to token numbers, the actual military balance will not be altered. Should these incoming contingents grow to assume military capabilities in their own right, neither Israel nor Syria—nor, for that matter, the Lebanese themselves—could be expected to let an increasing menace go unchecked.

The sense of international responsibility of the Arab world is on test these hours in Lebanon as perhaps never before. At stake is the final pacification of the Lebanese, civil war—or the eruption of a new Middle Eastern war.

The Mayor's Job

The emergence of what First Deputy Mayor John Zucotti described as "reason, sweet reason" at yesterday's meeting of the Emergency Financial Control Board is a welcome change from the bitter city-state feuding that followed last week's session.

It is especially encouraging that city officials now appear ready to acknowledge serious shortcomings in the new municipal budget that have been pointed out by the Control Board staff and others, and to accept the need for more and speedier spending reductions.

There is danger, however, in the suggestion by some business members of the Control Board that in the absence of specific proposals for fresh economies from the city, the board itself might offer suggestions as to where cuts could and should be made. Mayor Beame has encouraged such rash thinking by his constant efforts to pass the buck for tough political decisions to the Governor, the Legislature or the board; by his reluctance to face the need for additional cuts, and by his repeated resort to scare tactics when confronted with painful alternatives.

As the Mayor himself has repeatedly insisted, the Control Board should not become involved in determining local priorities. But the board will have no alternative if Mr. Beame fails to fulfill his own responsibilities. If New Yorkers are to retain some control over their destiny, they need local leadership with the courage to make tough choices before those choices are forced upon them by others or by the fresh crises that will surely develop if steps are not taken promptly to bring municipal spending under tighter control. This is essentially the Mayor's job.

Does Violence Sell?

Experts have deplored the steady diet of gore and violence on television. Psychologists have denounced its effects. Civic groups have cajoled the programmers to play down the mayhem. Task forces have urged change. The impact of all these pleas has been minimal.

It is therefore particularly significant when the spokesman for an advertising agency directly and profitably involved with television commercials reports that viewers may increasingly be dissuaded from buying products advertised on violent programs. Don Johnston, president of the J. Walter Thompson Company, told the annual convention of the American Advertising Federation that a study conducted by his agency showed that 10 percent of a sample of adult viewers considered not buying a product because it had been advertised on an excessively violent program; and 8 percent said they actually had not bought a product for just that reason.

Richard E. Wiley, chairman of the Federal Communications Commission, while applauding the implications of Mr. Johnston's findings, emphasized quite properly that remedies must be administered by the private sector, not through governmental interference.

Some television representatives respond to the study by hiding behind the claim that, in order to survive, the medium must reflect society's standards and tastes. Such attitudes make Mr. Johnston's report all the more welcome precisely because it suggests that the programmers may be underestimating the standards and tastes of a substantial segment of viewers.

If it turns out that violence burts not only psyches but sales, those programmers who have been deaf to academic or civic-minded appeals may begin to listen. Sad but true that the most effective argument against violence on TV would be that it isn't profitable.

The Nadjari Issue...

As the June 29 deadline set by Attorney General Louis Lefkowitz for Maurice Nadjari's tenure as special state prosecutor approaches, Governor Carey and Mr. Nadjari have resumed the wary circling and artful sniping that characterized their strange encounter last winter.

The Governor has made a somewhat cloudy suggestion that maybe the Attorney General should keep Mr. Nadjari in office past the deadline solely for the purposes of finishing up at least some of the work he has already begun. "Friends and associates" of Mr. Nadjari are letting it be known that such an arrangement would unduly complicate the prosecutor's task and that he would probably leave rather than accommodate himself to such a plan.

This drama is being played out against three backdrops. In the immediate foreground is a decision by the Court of Appeals limiting Mr. Nadjari's jurisdiction to "the criminal-justice process or system"—a substantially narrower field than the prosecutor has claimed for himself—and a number of sensational recent indictments of noted political and judicial figures. Some, if not all, of those indictments are sure to be challenged in the appellate courts as a result of the Court of Appeals ruling.

In the middle distance is the Governor's inept attempt to remove Mr. Nadjari from his post last December and the rejoicing suggestion from the prosecutor's camp that the attempt was made only because his investigations were getting close to high Democratic Party officials.

And, finally, in the deep background and almost completely obscured by the noisy controversy of the last few months are the Knapp Commission's amply documented findings that the Police Department in this city was shot through with corruption and that special effort was required to clean it up and to correct other problems in the criminal justice system as well.

That last factor and the additional fact that no one would seriously claim that the job is anywhere near completion are beyond doubt the most important elements of the picture and should guide the Attorney General's judgment as he deliberates the future of the special prosecutor's office.

... Blocks the Clean-Up

There are those among the special prosecutor's supporters who tend to equate Mr. Nadjari's personal survival in office with the survival of its important mission. Such a view does not take into account the continuing doubts concerning Mr. Nadjari's ability, his methods, his attitude toward civil liberties and his tenure, which have grown to such proportions as to be obstacles to the accomplishment of his task.

A case in point is Mr. Nadjari's latest setback, when the state's highest court—the Court of Appeals—upheld a lower court's reversal of the conviction obtained by the special prosecutor against Thomas J. Mackell, the former Queens District Attorney, on charges of conspiracy, hindering prosecution and official misconduct. The 6-to-1 ruling, holding that Mr. Mackell cannot be tried again by Mr. Nadjari, raises more questions than it answers. An unusually bitter dissent by Judge Mathew J. Jason called the lower court's finding "egregiously wrong." Pointing to the highly charged political atmosphere surrounding this case and its controversial prosecutor, Judge Jason called the majority's action "an effort to deprive the people of a rightful appeal..."

Regrettably, this view of the case provides no definitive answer to the question: Is the fault with the prosecutor's "controversial" nature or with a judicial establishment that, acting in a "political atmosphere," would turn against any special prosecutor and thus render him controversial?

Unfortunately for Mr. Nadjari, such questions will plague the office as long as he remains there, thus playing into the hands of those strongly entrenched forces that are determined to stay the efforts of any special prosecutor. In the interests of getting on with the task of cleaning up the criminal justice system in this city, it seems to us the wiser course now for the Attorney General to hold Mr. Nadjari to the deadline and appoint a new special prosecutor to undertake all of the responsibilities of the office, including a review of cases now pending.

Mr. Nadjari has been opposed by a strong and fanatically self-protective system of power-accumulation. His successor is bound to face the same kind of opposition from the powerful and well-placed beneficiaries of that system that Mr. Nadjari did.

Those facts pose enormous challenges both to Governor Carey and to the organized bar. The best way for the Governor to destroy the suspicions that his conflict with Mr. Nadjari has raised is to help Mr. Lefkowitz select a new prosecutor whose accomplishments, reputation and skills are so overwhelming that no charge of coziness with the present establishment could possibly be credible. And the best way for the bar to clear up its working conditions is to help the Governor and the Attorney General find such a person and to give the appointee full and total support. The sooner the current messy situation is cleared up, the better it will be. The job of giving New York a decent criminal justice system is bigger than one man's personality or even two men's wills.

Letters to the Editor

Of West Point and Honor

To the Editor:
There can be no question that the strictures of the Honor Code at West Point will be variously interpreted by each individual and that the general condition of the honor system will be a reflection of the attitudes of the cadet population as a whole.

To suggest that the pressures of the academic or disciplinary systems are the principal causes of the breakdown of the Honor Code is not a tenable argument. The scandal enveloped the second class, not the fourth (plebe or freshman) class. The second class has traditionally had the easiest time under the disciplinary system.

In the past dismissal or resignation for Honor Code violation has been most serious since the discharge was usually unaccompanied by specifications—e.g., the discharge was for other than honorable conditions. In most cases, if a cadet was accused of violating the Honor Code, he was given a non-judicial hearing by the Honor Committee where all the rules of evidence were suspended and hearsay could be used against him. The accused could appeal to the superintendent for the institution of judicial proceedings where his legal rights were protected.

It is possible that judicial review will modify the penalties ordained by the code without having to resort to special adjudications as to the degrees of guilt. But if we impose a judicial process in place of the code, the concept of honor as a guiding principle for cadet behavior will cease to exist.

In reality, the purpose of the code is to promote trust among officers and cadets through an unequivocal commitment to honorable behavior. It's difficult—perhaps impossible—to distinguish shades of malfeasance. If there is a weakness in the system, it is due to the inability to relate honorable with moral behavior. The apparent contradictions whereby a cadet demonstrates high morality by admitting to an infraction of the Honor Code only to suffer the same penalty as one caught red-handed is an implicit quality of the system.

Yet can we impose an ideal standard on behavior and equivocate in our judgment as to what constitutes a breach of that standard? I don't think that we can accommodate ourselves to a sliding scale of honor. The failures in military behavior which led to the My Lai cover-up demonstrates that honor is a binary entity—it either does or does not exist. The imposition of a sliding scale of penalties, on the other hand, is a matter for serious and cautious debate and continuous review.

Needless Subway Link

To the Editor:
David L. Yunich, chairman of M.T.A., complains that starting construction on a portion of the 63d Street subway line, from Sunnyside to Woodside, is in doubt because the Federal Government has lowered its contribution from $200 million to $160 million a year [see story June 6]. I hope the Federal Government lowers its contribution even further, so that the 63d Street Queens line has to be given up completely.

It is not needed. Ridership on the existing E and F trains has declined steadily since 1962. It is regrettable that the portions already built, the tunnels under Central Park and under the East River, will be wasted, but it is better to admit you goofed and get out than to continue stubbornly just because part of the work is done.

Landlords on 'Welfare'

To the Editor:
The argument advanced by Arthur J. Morgan in his May 24 letter begs to be followed to its logical conclusion. He reasons that the tenant, who pays his monthly rental in advance to his landlord, is a middle-class welfare recipient because our laws prevent the landlord from exacting a 100 percent or greater increase in rentals.

The true welfare recipient, then, is the high-class landlord who, while collecting his real-estate taxes in advance as part of his rent from his tenants,

What Makes a School Bus Unsafe

To the Editor:
Your May 26 editorial "School Bus Safety" was very one-sided. We would like to present another side, which is rarely, if ever, discussed in this type of tragedy. My husband is a former associate manager of a privately owned school-bus company, and I am a former school-bus driver.

First: School buses are designed to hold 44 adult passengers or 66 children. In this case there were 53 passengers, who, with the exception of the two adults and the driver, were close to adult size in terms of seating arrangements. In every charter that I have ever been involved in, it is the school district that orders the number of buses needed for that particular job. The school is responsible for overloading this bus, possibly for cost-cutting benefits. Had two buses been used, this accident would probably not have happened. When an overloaded school bus goes into a sharp turn, the passengers shift to one side, thereby making the bus virtually unmanageable. If there is excessive speed, this is transformed into a critical situation.

Second: You mentioned as "presumptive evidence" that the bus was 26 years old. Recently it has been shown that the bus had faulty brakes.

But does this mean that old equipment is not to be used or is to be considered useless? It was the responsibility of the bus company to keep this bus in perfect working condition despite the fact that it was 26 years old.

Third: You attributed the driving record of the driver as part of your presumptive evidence of insufficient safety precautions. Is every citizen who receives a traffic violation an incompetent driver? A driver's license will list all moving violations, ranging from running an obstructed stop sign to D.W.I. This does not say that any of these violations occurred while driving a school bus, and so quickly to malign someone, such as the driver in this case, is a gross injustice.

This is not to say that privately owned school-bus companies could not be improved. However, they should not have to bear the brunt of any public outcry for greater school bus safety. It is wise to remember the school officials who, in their attempts to hold down expenditures—and thereby property taxes—often sacrifice safety in the name of finance.

U.S. Investigators Study a Charge of Sex-for-Vote Bid

encounter coincides with Miss Ray's description in her own novel, published this week, of "a meeting with a 'Senator' on the Potomac River some years ago.

Told of Miss Ray's assertions and Mrs. Gardner's recollection, Senator Gravel termed the story "ridiculous" and said he did not remember ever having met anyone named Elizabeth Ray.

Senator Gravel said he doubted that Mr. Gray, Democrat who retired from Congress in 1973, had ever had occasion to offer him a bribe, because "I needed things [Congressional assistance] from Gray more than he needed things from me."

The Senator added, however, that he believed it was futile to attempt to prevent Miss Ray's account from becoming public.

At the time of the purported incident—whether it occurred in 1972 or 1973 is unclear in Miss Ray's book and in Mrs. Gardner's memory—both men were chairman of respective House and Senate subcommittees with authority over public buildings, and they worked together frequently in those capacities, Mr. Gravel said.

Earlier charges by Miss Ray National Congressional Committee, against Representative Wayne L. Hays, Democrat of Ohio, to unseat the Ohio Democrat have led to the convening of a grand jury to look into the charges. Her statements to Federal investigators are covered by laws that make it a crime for her to make false statements to them.

According to the publisher, Miss Ray's book, "The Washington Fringe Benefit," is a roman à clef—a novel in which living characters have been given apocryphal but revealing names.

Miss Ray, who is 33 years old, was dismissed by Mr. Hays after she said that he had placed her in a $14,000-a-year Capitol Hill job to obtain her services as his mistress, and that she had never performed any work in exchange for her salary.

Mrs. Gardner, who is 28, resigned last March from her $28,800 job with Representative John Young because, she said, she was given little meaningful work by the 59-year-old Texas Democrat, who wanted her to remain sexually available to him.

'An Actual Witness'

In a recent telephone conversation with Mr. Young, which Mrs. Gardner resented, the incident involving Miss Ray and Senator Gravel was brought up, and the Texas Congressman asked Mrs. Gardner whether she had been "an actual witness" to it.

"I was," Mrs. Gardner replied. "The cabin was open, I was sitting there drinking, I saw."

The Justice Department, which has reportedly expressed no interest in Miss Ray's otherwise innocuous personal relationships with members of Congress, is reported to be investigating the possibility that this incident may come under a bribery statute that covers the offer of a thing of value for an official act.

Mr. Gray, who now operates a public relations concern here, is expected to appear next week before a Federal grand jury investigating Miss Ray's charges against Mr. Hays.

The Ohio Democrat was reported to be resting comfortably today in a hospital in Barnesville, Ohio, after he became comatose last night from an overdose of a sleeping medicine. Today, House Democratic leaders, who had previously together secured Mr. Young's resignation, as chairman of the Democratic caucus, postponed an attempt to unseat the Ohio Democrat from the chairmanship of the House Administration Committee.

In her novel, Miss Ray, whom Mrs. Gardner said she had known for some years but had not seen recently, said that her employer ("Mr. Bright," a lobbyist) directed her to "go upstairs" with the Senator to make a deal with the Senator. Miss Ray wrote in the book that her employer later showed her legislation pending in the Senate, saying, "This is what I am going to get passed in the Senate tomorrow."

According to Mrs. Gardner, whose version of the incident coincided with that in the novel, Miss Ray said at the time that she had been told in advance by Mr. Gray to entertain Senator Gravel in return for some official favor. Mrs. Gardner said that her glimpse of the subsequent intimacies between Miss Ray and Mr. Gravel was accidental.

Last week, Mrs. Gardner said that, after the disclosure of Mr. Hays's relationship with Miss Ray, Mr. Gray had told her in a telephone conversation to "forget what you saw" aboard his houseboat on that occasion.

Mr. Gray said today that he could not recall whether Senator Gravel, Miss Ray and Mrs. Gardner had ever made up a sailing party on his boat.

But he insisted that he had spoken to Mrs. Gardner on only one occasion since Miss Ray's initial allegation against Mr. Hays, and said that "I never told her not to talk to anyone about anything."

Sources close to the expanding Federal investigation of potential wrongdoing in Capitol Hill—which now embraces allegations of misuse of Government funds, bribery, conspiracy and fraud—said Mrs. Gardner was scheduled to talk with lawyers from the Justice Department early next week, both about Mr. Gray and Mr. Young.

Today, Mr. Young described suggestions that he had paid Mrs. Gardner an inflated salary in return for sexual favors as "sheep, poppycock."

He refused to confirm or deny that he had been intimate with Mrs. Gardner or to comment on an assertion by Melanie Hall, another former secretary, that he had made advances to her in his office.

Mrs. Gardner joined Mr. Young's staff in 1970 at a salary of $8,500 a year, which increased to nearly $26,000 at the time of her resignation last March 15. Miss Hall's salary rose from $10,500 to more than $16,000 during the two years and four months she was employed by Mr. Young.

The Texas Congressman defended those and other salaries as "very high" but said that "our staff is underpaid." House records show that Mr. Young's other secretaries are earning more than $21,000 a year, and that a third secretary, who is drawing her Congressional retirement pay in addition to a salary, is earning more than $25,000 a year.

Secret Meetings

However, in a telephone conversation with Mrs. Gardner last August, which she also recorded, Mr. Young is heard to say: "This office is a special-type operation—we've discussed that before. It's probably true you couldn't get as good a salary somewhere else."

In a recent interview, Mrs. Gardner said that her sexual encounters with Mr. Young had taken place almost entirely in motels in the Washington area, and that the Congressman had registered under the pseudonym "George Denton."

Mr. Young has conceded that he took a number of motel

Senate Passes Resolution Pledging Support for Italy

WASHINGTON, June 11 (UPI)—The Senate passed a resolution today supporting Italian democracy and pledging United States financial aid for that economically troubled nation where Communists are trying to gain Cabinet membership in elections this month.

Similar legislation was passed by the House earlier this week. Senator Edward W. Brooke, Republican of Massachusetts, sponsor of the resolution, said it was not an attempt to interfere in the Italian elections scheduled for June 20.

"It is an attempt to support a country which holds values similar to our own," Mr. Brooke said.

Mr. Brooke said that Communist participation in the Italian Government would make the North Atlantic Treaty Organization "a hollow shell."

rooms under that name, but contends that they were used for secret meetings with Defense Department employees who provided him with confidential information about the Pentagon's operations.

In one of the numerous telephone conversations recorded by Mrs. Gardner over the last year, however, Mr. Young is heard to ask her whether he ought to "go by and get a room or not."

"Why don't you come down [to the motel] about 11," the Congressman asked her, "so we can get ahead of the noon people?"

In other phone conversations, also recorded by Mrs. Gardner, Mr. Young discussed their relationship, making such remarks as "I wasn't deeply in love with you, it grew on me," and "The physical part's important, but not that important."

As for Mr. Hays's continuing problems, the House Democratic Caucus was scheduled to vote next Wednesday on a resolution that would oust him from his chairmanship of the House Administration Committee.

But after receiving word from Ohio that Mr. Hays would probably be hospitalized for a week or more, Democratic leaders said they would postpone a vote on the resolution and defer taking any other action against him.

Representative John J. Rhoads of Arizona, the House minority leader, said the delay in ousting Mr. Hays would not affect the Republican position because "there is no great change in attitude around here—most of the Republicans still will vote against him whenever it comes up."

Mr. Hays, when he regained consciousness, immediately asked for his wife, Patricia, who has not left the Barnesville hospital since he was rushed here yesterday shortly after 11 A.M. A nurse on the floor said that when she had asked him where he thought he was, he had replied, "Barnesville."

Mr. Hays regained consciousness about 5:30 A.M., according to doctors. Mrs. Hays, the manager of his Ohio district office whom he married two months ago, had gone to a room down the hall to get some sleep when a nurse woke her up.

"She's at his side," Mr. Hays's press secretary, who arrived last night at this tiny country hospital, 11 miles from the Hays's home and cattle farm in Belmont. "She's been at his side since then, telling him things like, 'I love you, it's going to be all right, don't worry.'"

There have been reports that Mr. Hays and his wife have been under great strain from the disclosures that he paid Miss Ray a Congressional salary to be his mistress, and that his suffered for a long time, then his diverticulitis, flared up during the last few days, forcing him to take in little food.

Later tonight, Mr. Hays was moved from the intensive care unit to a private room with private nurses. Dr. Phillips said that his patient was doing so well that he had been standing at the side of his bed, had asked for his bedroom slippers and had been "complaining about everything—the intravenous feeding, the equipment, He's back to his old self."

Before the laboratory report this afternoon, Mrs. Hays and close family friends of the Representative had said that they thought the overdose was an accident, that Mr. Hays, weak and very tired, could easily have taken a couple of sleeping pills, and then awakened and absent-mindedly taken two more.

Mrs. Clawson described the events that led up to Mr. Hays's overdose as follows: Early on Wednesday morning, Mr. Hays went back to Washington from his Belmont home, where he had been listening to the results of the Ohio primary, where he beat his primary opponent, but by a much smaller margin than in previous years. In Washington, he consulted with his attorneys, "I think they even had some good news for him," Mrs. Clawson said. "I think it was the fact that they had collected evidence that Elizabeth Ray did do legitimate work for him."

Then he went to the House of Representatives to be present for two bills on the floor, and then he saw Mrs. Clawson at about 6 P.M.

"He was very tired, and his stomach was bothering him," said Mrs. Clawson, "he was lying down on the couch, but

Upturn Enables Market to Snap String of 6 Weekly Declines in Succession

By DOUGLAS W. CRAW Stocks advanced on a broad front yesterday, with the Dow Jones Industrial average adding 14.41 points to close at 978.88. The strong rise, extending an upturn that took shape on Thursday, enabled the stock market to break a string of six consecutive weekly declines. The Dow was up 14.90 points for the week. Blue-chip issues led the rally, which was accompanied by a slight pickup in trading. No single news development triggered the upturn. Brokers suggested it reflected an accumulation of generally positive recent economic reports.

Monetary Policy Stabilized Robert F. McFarland, vice president of Mitchell Hutchins Inc., said that monetary policy appeared to have stabilized this week with short-term rates holding even or moving slightly lower. This rate stabilization helped the market this week, he added. Prices were ahead at the outset, with the Dow up 5.98 points at 10:30 A.M. By 2:30 P.M. the average was up 7.29 points, and it moved steadily ahead to close at its high for the day.

Brazil Businessmen Score Geisel's Politics

By JONATHAN KANDELL

RIO DE JANEIRO, June 8—From its beginning 12 years ago, the right-wing military Government in Brazil has always prided itself in being a no-nonsense, decisive Government that any businessman could support. It has been widely understood among Brazilians that the aggregation of capital, economic expansion and political stability are considerably higher among the Government's priorities than the mere equitable distribution of wealth and the exercise of democratic rights. But during the last year...

or so—and increasingly in recent months—the military Government of President Ernesto Geisel has come under blistering private criticism from its business constituency. Not an Open Revolt The grumbling has not reached the stage of an open revolt by the business community. In fact, few businessmen would dare make a public denunciation of the Government, and most of them would probably like to see the armed forces continue in power until the end of this century. But in private conversation, businessmen, industrialists and bankers tend to denounce a broad consensus in attacking the Government for its alleged indecision in almost all key economic areas. These include its attempts to control inflation, cope with a burgeoning balance-of-payments deficit, stimulate petroleum exploration, draw more private investment and hold back the increasing role of the state in the economy. There is widespread nostalgia among businessmen for the previous military Government of President Emílio Garrastazu Médici, who entrusted economic affairs to his finance Minister, Antonio Delfim Neto. As a virtual economic czar, Mr. Delfim Neto consulted regularly with the business community and delegated authority easily to subordinates to speed up bureaucratic decision-making. A Solitary Man President Geisel, a hard-driving but solitary man, has insisted on holding the political and economic reins closely. The leading members of his Cabinet—Finance Minister Mario Henrique Simonsen, Planning Minister João Paulo...

Chemical and White Weld Said To Default on Utility Bonds

A spokesman for the Sacramento Municipal Utility District charged yesterday in California that the Chemical Bank and White Weld & Co. were in default on the purchase of a $25 million bond issue. The investor group failed to close the purchase last Tuesday. The utility will "hold the $250,000 'good faith' check," which was required with the bid for the bonds, he said. However, he acknowledged that the suit was filed in Federal District Court in San Francisco last Tuesday by Chemical and White Weld to recover the $250,000. Officials of the Sacramento utility are now considering rescheduling of the financing and whether to institute litigation against the investment group. A Chemical spokesman declined to comment on whether or not the investing group had filed suit. The Chemical official said that the bank and White Weld had requested a postponement on May 24, one day before the original delivery date, because... of an addendum to the bond official statement. Information in the addendum included lower projected operating revenues over the next 10 years than those in the original statement. Another factor in the refusal to close the deal, according to the bank's official, was that the utility's first quarter revenues were not included in the official statement. They were not published until after the competitive bidding. Revenues in the first quarter of 1976 were lower than in the 1975 quarter. The winning bid by Chemical Bank and White Weld on the five-year general obligation bonds with an interest cost of 1.135 percent, was received by the utility on May 6. There was an unusually large spread between that bid and the next lowest bidder, a group led by the Crocker National Bank. The Crocker group's bid would have resulted in a 4.31 percent interest cost. The highest rate was Smith Barney Harris Upham syndicate with a 4.53 percent interest cost.

Market Place

Municipal Bond Funds Popular

By VARTANIG G. VARTAN

While investor enthusiasm over the stock market has waned in recent months, sales of shares in municipal bond funds by brokers continue to boom.

The key attraction, of course, is that interest received on these funds—currently running over 7 percent—is free from Federal income taxes and may be exempt from state and local taxes as well.

Traditionally, the municipal bond fund has been a closed-end unit trust. The portfolio, consisting mainly of municipal bonds with maturities of 25 years or longer, is assembled before the fund is sold to investors.

Corporate bond funds, also offered as unit trusts, have similarly become popular with investors in the process, both types of unit trusts have siphoned away considerable amounts of money that during the 1960's, went into mutual funds.

Richard J. Franke, president of John Nuveen & Company, which sponsors municipal bond funds whose shares are sold through dealers, predicted this spring that industry-wide sales of these funds would reach a record of about $2.8 billion in 1976, compared with last year's $2.2 billion.

That estimate for 1976 may be a little conservative, one Wall Street observer noted that Merrill Lynch, Pierce, Fenner & Smith put together this week a $40-million Municipal Investment Trust Fund, with a current yield of 7.3 percent. The sales charge is 3 1/2 percent.

At Merrill Lynch, F. Douglas Harrell said that the firm last year served as managing sponsor of $1 billion in municipal bond funds.

SHENANDOAH OIL NEARER MERGING

Letter of Intent Entered for DuPont to Exchange Stock

By HERBERT KOSHEZ

The merger of the Shenandoah Oil Corporation of Fort Worth into E. I. du Pont de Nemours & Company, first announced in February, moved a step closer to completion yesterday with the entering of a letter of intent for the exchange of shares.

Shenandoah, for each common share of DuPont, will receive 3.29 shares of DuPont common stock, which is expected to close at $28.00 on the New York Stock Exchange, would be valued at $92.33 million.

Shenandoah said that the boards of both companies would meet late this month to act on a definitive agreement to merge the companies in the tax-free exchange of securities.

Shenandoah said a special meeting of its shareholders to vote on the transaction would be held in mid-August. DuPont shareholders will not be required to vote on it.

The offer is conditional on 51 percent of DuPont common stock, being tendered. It also is contingent on Ventron's directors not opposing the offer or starting litigation in connection with it.

Further charged the defendants with "intent to deceive" in reporting or publishing purchase or sale of options "wherein, in fact, no actual change of ownership or interest was effected."

Some Restaurant Diners Have Appetite for Accessories Too

By MIMI SHERATON
Although it has been fully open for business only a few weeks, Windows on the World, the elaborately designed restaurant in the sky, atop the World Trade Center, has already lost many of its more distinctive and expensive table appointments to souvenir-hunting customers.

One spokesman for this lofty project (he chose to remain anonymous) said customers had already taken forks and knives, silver salt and pepper dishes, and so many of the porcelain Rosenthal ashtrays that they are already being replaced with glass. Even a few of the large, handsome, insulated silver coffee pots made by the prestigious Sambonet factory in Italy were among the missing.

"They've taken some other things too," the spokesman said. "But we don't like to talk about this sort of thing. It only gives the public more ideas."

A Mincing of Words
Judging by reports from all parts of the country, ideas are the last thing the public needs when it comes to pilferage, the sugar-coated euphemism restaurant owners prefer to the harsher, less elegant, "stealing."

By any name this costly practice is the reason for restaurants using giant pepper mills that are difficult to conceal, and for the absence of such refined appointments as demitasse spoons and fish forks and knives, which are among the more popular take-home items. It is also the reason restaurant tables are eventually furnished with cheaper, unattractive substitutes, as owners tire of the drain on profits because of pilferage.

It is virtually impossible to determine just how big the loss is. Bob Curtis, a former security chief at Lord & Taylor, who now heads Curtis Consultants in Dayton, Ohio, develops security systems for retail stores and restaurants.

"You have to allow for a loss ranging from 1 percent to 2 percent of gross sales," he explained, "but that includes employee stealing, and some breakage and loss from simple carelessness, such as throwing knives and forks into the garbage. Customer pilferage adds to the price, of course, especially since restaurants do not carry insurance for minor thefts."

John Berger, the food and beverage controller of Commander's Palace in New Orleans estimates he lost $240 in salt and pepper mills alone in one 30-day period.

"They disappear most rapidly just before Christmas," he observed.

At Broussard's, in the same city, John Segreto, one of the owners, said his small forks for oysters "disappear like mad." He also described a group of middle-aged San Franciscans who were in his restaurant last November. Three of the women in the party gradually disassembled a 12-inch high silver table lamp and slipped the parts into their purses.

"I went to the host and told him that would cost him $100 and the lamp began to reappear as gradually as it had gone. They left here pretty mad though. Anything you put your name on goes too. Our ashtrays walk like crazy."

Coming to the same conclusions, many restaurants, including Antoine's in New Orleans and Windows on the World, leave names off their more costly accessories, while others consider it good advertising on inexpensive take-aways.

The consensus among restaurant owners in 11 cities is that women are a little more inclined to steal than men, that tourists take more freely than residents and that holidays bring the worst in souvenir hunters.

John Mosker, owner of Johnny's Dock, a popular restaurant in Tacoma, Wash., said, "We have lots of stealing even when no tourists are around, so we know it's done by local residents."

But Peter Courvall, manager of Chicago's Playboy Club, blames constant management company asking to remain nameless, described a few more serious but all-too-common offenses.

"When coffee is sold by the cup, a customer will drink most of it, then dump a load of cream into the cup and ask the waitress to 'top it off' because he made it too light."

"Then there's the counter customer who waits for his favorite waitress to have an open seat because an extra 25-cent tip usually results in getting a dessert that is left off his bill, or being charged for a sandwich that is less expensive than the one he ordered."

"But bars are probably the places where regulars who leave $1 tips can get phenomenal returns on their investments, in the form of no-charge drinks, doubles at the price of singles, or premium brands at regular prices."

While it may be hard to determine whether customer pilferage is on the increase, it is certainly no recent development, nor are celebrities immune to the practice.

Stuart Levin, who owned the late Pavillon from 1968 to 1972, said an early country music star took Bacarat crystal prisms from the chandeliers in the ladies' room, hung them around her neck and went back into the dining room. Upon hearing this from another customer who witnessed the act, Mr. Levin added $500 to the dinner check. It was paid without comment.

Richard Blumenthal, president of Restaurant Associates, recalled some of the rip-offs his company suffered at the hands of customers back in the mid 50's and 60's when such elaborate design creations as the Forum of the Twelve Caesars and La Fonda del Sol were newly opened.

"At the Forum," he said, "we almost got used to people taking the silver salt dishes, copied from ancient Roman salinums, that cost us $25 each, the brass and copper service plates that were $50, and the bronze bust of a Caesar taken from a wall bracket."

"But even we were stunned to find that someone had taken the gold-plated dolphin hot and cold water taps from the ladies' room. It must have been a female plumber."

And one of Fred Rufe's most vivid recollections of his days as director of La Fonda del Sol, the colorful La-veventioneers and tourists. "Most of our steady customers took their supplies long ago," he reported.

At the 450-seat Old Vienna Hofbrau in Boston, John F. Helfer, the owner, said he lost a lot of silverware to students and young working people who "take what they need to set up light housekeeping."

Even the most experienced restaurateurs are at a loss to explain the modus operandi of many acquisitive customers. Chris Bastis of Seafare of the Aegean on West 56th Street, wonders what happens to the water and ice in the large, handpainted pitchers he imports from Rhodes—the pitchers disappear regularly. He assumes customers who want their stay until they consume the contents.

But that is not always the case at the Savoy Grill, a handsome old seafood house in Kansas City, Mo.

"We have real neat water bottles on the tables and customers carry them out in satchels or under big coats," said Ralph Ellsworth, the dining-room manager. "Sometimes they pour the water on the floor first. That makes the waiters suspicious."

Pilferage of souvenir tableware is not the only kind of customer dishonesty restaurant owners contend with. An executive with a large resaurant management company asking to remain nameless, described a few more serious but all-too-common offenses.

"When coffee is sold by the cup, a customer will drink most of it, then dump a load of cream into the cup and ask the waitress to 'top it off' because he made it too light."

"Then there's the counter customer who waits for his favorite waitress to have an open seat because an extra 25-cent tip usually results in getting a dessert that is left off his bill, or being charged for a sandwich that is less expensive than the one he ordered."

"But bars are probably the places where regulars who leave $1 tips can get phenomenal returns on their investments, in the form of no-charge drinks, doubles at the price of singles, or premium brands at regular prices."

While it may be hard to determine whether customer pilferage is on the increase, it is certainly no recent development, nor are celebrities immune to the practice.

merican folk art restaurant, has to do with an ordinarily respectable regular customer who one night attempted to steal a $150 table lamp.

Tucking the heavy, triple-turreted battery-operated lamp under his arm, he started to sneak out a side door with his girlfriend, only to be apprehended by an alert maitre d'. Calling to apologize the next morning, the would-be thief explained sheepishly that his date had refused to go to bed with him unless he stole the lamp—buying it would not do.

Such a situation would come as no surprise to Bob Curtis, the security consultant.

"We found, as a result of 32,000 interviews with 'molefactors'—the most nonprofessional thieves steal on impulse, and especially when they are depressed," he said. "Some people find stealing stimulating and as exciting as riding a roller coaster because it's a thrill and you can't get hurt too badly."

Intent Hard to Prove
"Most restaurant owners are reluctant to stop a customer who is taking something because it's hard to prove intent and there is danger of being sued for false arrest or defamation of character," he continued. "It's best to wait until they have left the premises and still safer if they are carrying the things in an unusual place. Handbags and shopping bags are not unusual places. A customer could say he planned to pay for what he was carrying at the cashier's desk."

"But the armhole of a coat is an unusual place to carry a plate or a peppermill and we once caught a chef who was stealing steaks and carrying them out under his hat, clearly miscalculating he was hiding them. We caught on only because the hood started dripping down his forehead."

Mr. Curtis concludes that the moral attitude toward customer pilferage is, to say the least, relaxed.

"Dishonesty is a concept dating back to Bible days," he said. "It was considered wrong to steal because it hurt someone's pocket. But people who steal from a large restaurant, a hotel or a fast food chain, do not feel as though they are stealing from a person. They also think that with current high prices, they are entitled to anything they can get their hands on."

A Nursery School That Welcomes Under-3's—and on an Hourly Basis

By VIRGINIA LEE WARREN
Special to The New York Times
NEW YORK, N.Y. — After Nancy Katz had been stricken with multiple sclerosis, she had to go to a hospital for therapy twice a week. What to do with her son, David, on those mornings? He was not quite 2 years old, and nursery schools here in Rockland County as elsewhere usually take only children who are at least 3.

Then Mrs. Katz heard of a place called Plink Plunk. Yes, it would take David. He could come to the creative play group in the orange-colored office building at 151 South Main Street for as many mornings as his mother and father—Harvey Katz, a dress manufacturer—wished. The parents gave a grateful sigh.

"So we started him last September," said Mrs. Katz the other day, "and he liked it so much that in January we started sending him an extra morning. He's now 2½ and he's learned quite a lot; he can count up to 15 and knows the letters of the alphabet."

But what pleases Mrs. Katz most, she said, "is when David comes home and talks about his adventures at Plink Plunk I can tell that he loves the place and is having a wonderful time."

The David Gottlieb had a problem similar to the Katzes': what to do with their son Adam two afternoons a week.

"I started going to needlework workshops last September," Irene Gottlieb explained, "Adam was only 2, he wasn't toilet trained and his coordination was slow.

Then we learned of Plink Plunk and Adam loves it and has progressed so much. He goes regularly two afternoons but sometimes I put him there for an extra one if I'm not going to be able to be at home. Adam always looks forward to going."

These mothers happened to mention the four things that make the Plink Plunk nursery school different from others in the opinion of Lois Brenner Weiss, who established the center two years ago—the willingness to take, on an irregular, even impromptu, basis, children who are as young as 2, who aren't toilet trained and who may have some difficulty, such as poor coordination.

"What I wanted to have," said Mrs. Weiss, who has an 8-year-old daughter of her own, "was a place where arrangements could be made on an hourly basis by mothers who have to be out occasionally and want to be sure their children are being exposed to a stimulating and safe environment when they cannot be with them."

The opportunity to do last-minute planning is especially valued by the mothers. "The really wonderful thing about Plink Plunk," said Gail Golden, "is that at the last minute I can call and leave my daughter there for an hour or two at $1.50 an hour."

Mrs. Golden, a psychiatric social worker, is a volunteer at a counseling service here. Her husband, Howard, is a Manhattan lawyer. Their daughter, Deborah, is 2½.

While the creative play group, which, in the course of a year, takes care of about 400 children up to 5 years old (never more than a dozen in a class), is probably the outstanding activity at Plink Plunk, the classes for introduction to the dance (a little ballet, a little tap, a few acrobatics) run a close second.

The dance class takes 3-year-olds and more than 350 children, from 3 to 15, have been trying to follow the directions of Susan Jason, who has danced with Andre Egley's ballet company.

There is also a preschool music appreciation course and 3½-year-old Jennifer Perino "comes home very proud of what she has learned," according to her parents, Mr. and Mrs. Joseph Perino.

Then there are introductory art classes but only children 5, 6 and 7 years old are admitted to them. About 50 have been enrolled.

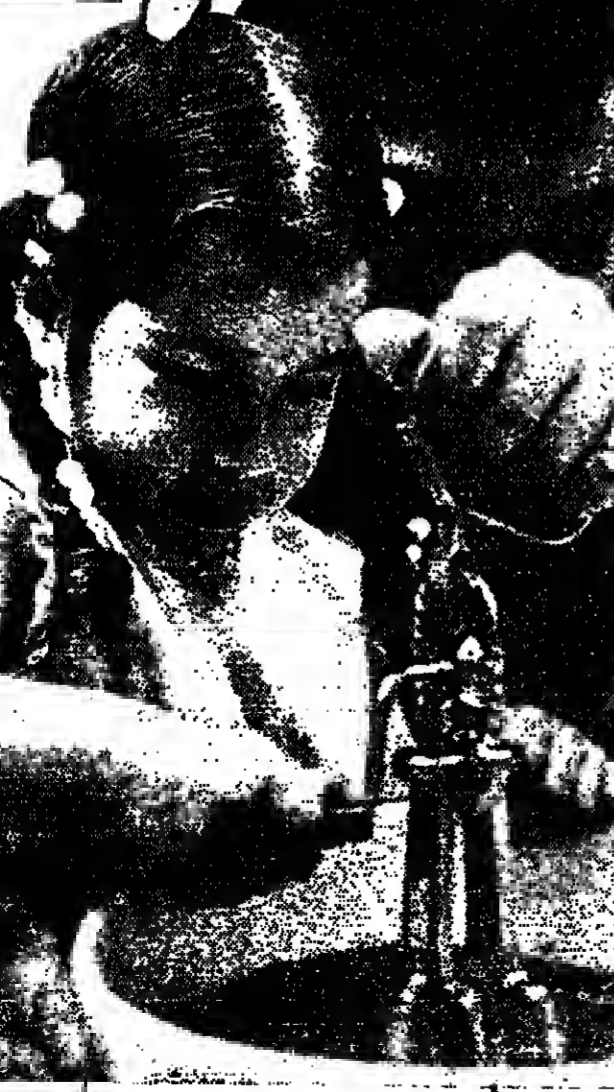

And finally, there are piano and guitar lessons. Mrs. Weiss, who studied to be a concert pianist, gives some of the piano lessons. In fact, that is all she did before branching out from her home in Congers to the office building on Main Street.

Plink Plunk has a faculty of 12, and the three women who handle the creative play group are certified teachers.

All activities will come to a close on June 18 but when they resume in September prices will be the same: $4 for a three-hour session of creative play, or $1.50 for one hour; $4 an hour for music appreciation; $60 for 15 art classes of one hour; $117 for 38 dance lessons in the course of a year or $3.25 for one hour; $7 for a half-hour piano or guitar lesson.

A dance step can be hard for a 4-year-old. Another youngster waits excitedly for pudding being made below.

Bright Briefcase for the Arrived Woman

By ANGELA TAYLOR
Once a woman's gotten her name on the office door—and, of course, a carpet on the floor—won't she also want a good-looking briefcase, instead of shoving papers higgledy-piggledy into a tote bag?

The Mark Cross shop seems to think so. The shop is selling a feminine-looking briefcase in bright green as well as shiny black. In addition to its flat handle, the case has a shoulder strap to make it easy to carry. The price is $200, but if the woman executive has gotten a fat raise along with her new title, she can afford to splurge.

The Roberta di Camerino shop in the Olympic Tower has an even more elaborate briefcase. It's made of cut velvet in the shop's famous trompe-l'oeil design in colors as pretty as Venetian glass. This case is for the newly elevated company president (or a $1 million-a-year television newscaster like Barbara Walters). The tag reads $550.

The Hermès scarf is an international status symbol and it's at its most atavistic in its newest pattern. In a well-manicured hands-across-the-sea gesture, the French leather house has chosen the American Bicentennial for its latest scarf.

The generous-sized silk square is printed with a map of the United States, surrounded by the symbols of the 50 states. The colors are mainly red, gold and blue, so it isn't too exceedingly chauvinistic. The price is $55 at the Hermès shop in Bonwit Teller.

Shopping at Azuma has cachet, too, at the other end of the price scale. Quite a few Beautiful People who are secure in their fashion taste pick up little something there regularly. Right now, the store is an ideal place to fill in a summer wardrobe for very little.

For instance, there's the straw hat with a sun crown and a small brim (it looks rather like a sun helmet) that a number of fashion groupies, both male and female, are wearing. It looks as though it might have been designed by some up-and-coming Halston. However, the shrewd-eyed-fad-spotter can pick one up for $2.98 and add her own ribbon or roses or whatever.

Even with a closet full of T-shirts, one is always missing a particular color. Azuma has a wide variety of colors in cotton T-shirts from India, most of them tagged at $1.95 or $2.49. Kurtas, the overblouses worn in India, are perfect tops for pants; Azuma's are mainly in the $10 range. Another good buy is a floor-length Madras plaid skirt, nicely lined, at $15.95.

Many women are fond of the comfort of the wide-toed Earth Shoe, but have found the weight of the regular well as camel and brown ($35). A flat pump with a sling back is made in black patent, bright red and green calf, as well as the usual neutrals ($29.50).

About 80 pieces of rather baroque-looking silver, from teapots to candlesticks to fanciful chess pieces, can now be seen in an exhibition in the lobby of Lever House at Park Avenue and 54th Street. The show is the result of an annual student competition held by the Sterling Silversmiths Guild of America, a silver manufacturers' trade association.

A number of the pieces, many of which are for sale, are embellished with other materials, such as wood, plastic, enamel and other metals. And if the designs from these students are any indication of things to come, the silver serving pieces and decorative objects of the near future will do a lot of curving and swirling around. The strong influence of Scandinavian design on contemporary silver was nowhere to be seen. The show will continue through June 28.

Ask Device Shows Immediately Cost of Long-Distance Phone Call

York Times

June 11—An ask device makes an eye of the cost of a telephone point in the mental Unitates. No op assistance quired. Pat- 1,862,548 was ted to Wayne patent attorney rington, Va., s named the ing the curves inside a single letter.

In the technique, which so far has been used only in laboratory experiments, the point of a pen or stylus is moved over a surface containing sensors that transmit information to an electronic processing unit for comparison with records in a memory. If a green light shows, the writing is genuine, but a red light says no. An amber light indicates doubt, and suggests a second trial.

One RCA spokesman compared the process to remote fingerprinting. It could be used to verify signatures in credit-card and banking transactions and in identifications to gain admittance to restricted areas.

New Suture Remover

The removal of sutures, the stitches that remain on the surface of the body after an operation, has always been a problem for surgeons. Dr. Boris Schwartz, attending surgeon at the Paterson General Hospital in New Jersey, offers an inexpensive answer in patent 3,961,419, granted him this week.

Throughout history, Dr. Schwartz says, sutures have been removed by a grasping instrument, a forceps or clamp and a cutting scissor. If these are to be reusable, they require sterilization and packaging, and the disposable kind are usually ineffective. He replaces the forceps or clamps with an adhesive strip and supplies a wire cutter shaped like a paper clip with one sharp edge. As the adhesive lifts a suture, the wire cutter is slid under it. The sutures and equipment can be thrown away.

Antitrust Game

An antitrust prosecuting board game was patented this week by Ralph Anspach for Anti-Monopoly Inc., San Rafael, Calif. Patent 3,961,795 explains that the game's objective is the termination of monopolistic practices of company combinations. One of the players is selected as the budget director. If, by moving indictment chips, a trust-busting player succeeds in his fight against a combination, the budget director can pay him an imaginary bonus of $300 if it's an oligopoly, $500 if it's a trust and $700 if it's a monopoly.

Snack Foods from Apples

Two Japanese were granted a patent this week for a method of producing snack foods from apples. Takano Yamazaki and Takemi Hayashida assigned Patent 3,962,355 to the Karro Company Ltd. of Tokyo. As outlined, the steps include cutting apples into pieces, soaking the pieces in sugar syrup, draining the excess syrup away, drying the drained pieces in hot air and finally, at reduced pressure, frying them and cooling them until they harden.

SOY MEAL PRICES CONTINUE TO RISE

Surge Is Laid to Rumors of Buying by Chinese

By ELIZABETH M. FOWLER Soybean meal continued its price surge yesterday on the Chicago Board of Trade, closing up $2.58 at $203.50 a ton for July delivery. During the session it hit a contract high of $207.50. The meal, which is used in animal feed, set the pace for a sharp rise also in soybeans, out of which the meal is produced. The rumor persisted that China was buying soybean meal, but yesterday traders identified Cargill Inc. as the exporter and said 100,000 tons were involved.

"We call it a good rumor," a trader commented, "when a buyer, an exporter, and the amount is rumored on the floor." It was also reported that Rumania had bought 90,000 tons of soybean meal. A week ago soybean meal sold in terms of July futures around $175 a ton, a rise of more than $28 a ton or about 16 percent in the week. Demand reflects drought conditions in some nations in Europe and elsewhere.

Meanwhile, wheat and corn prices weakened. July wheat closed at $3.70, down 10 cents a bushel because the harvest is now in full swing. During such periods pressure develops on prices, partly because of cash deliveries of wheat at terminals and partly because farmers and others sell to hedge. July corn closed at $3.04, down from $3.09, a bushel. The decline was attributed to good rainfall in the cornbelt areas.

The Futures Industry Association, a trade organization, announced that futures trading involved 13.3 million contracts for January through May, or 13 percent more than the previous year. Futures trading has set yearly records in the last decade with this year no exception.

Eisenpreis Out as Beame Presses to End Job Drain

Another proposal is to create a three-man mayoral board to oversee a new program that would emphasize marketing the city's strengths to businessmen.

The effort to recast economic policy and to build a new structure to effect it began in April and Mr. Beame hopes to see it completed within a few weeks.

They are John E. Zuccotti, the First Deputy Mayor; Victor Marrero, the City Planning Commissioner; Richard J. Shinn, president of the Metropolitan Life Insurance Company.

Mr. Beame and Mr. Eisenpreis exchanged formal letters on resignation yesterday, but there was no warmth in them.

His letter gave no clue to why he resigned except for the expression of his desire to accept an "interesting and important assignment" in the private sector.

The chamber chairman, George Champion, could not be reached at his office or his home yesterday to confirm this.

Administration is broadly shared in the business community, but this feeling is tempered by the view that no agency could be expected to make much headway against the heavy weight of taxation, red tape and high costs that all kinds of enterprises here face.

Views of Mr. Eisenpreis vary. John S. Dyson, the state Commerce Commissioner, praised his "intelligence and imagination" and credited him with putting together the plan for using tax abatements to rebuild the Commodore Hotel and getting that plan approved by the Board of Estimate.

On the other hand, Mr. Dyson said the administrator apparently had failed to create an effective staff of troubleshooters. "Too often," he said, "my own people have helped businessmen cut their way through the city's incredible maze of red tape."

Former officials who left E.D.A. were particularly critical of its efforts to keep manufacturing plants in the city. Arthur B. Levine, who was a special assistant to the administrator for two years, said the agency never developed the capability of combining various Federal and state programs that make it possible for new businesses to start up with little capital.

Other efforts he initiated have come to nothing. A plan to create a vast industrial park in the South Bronx rail yards of the Penn Central, which was announced with great fanfare 16 months ago, now is stymied by technical difficulties in clearing enough of the 100-acre site for redevelopment.

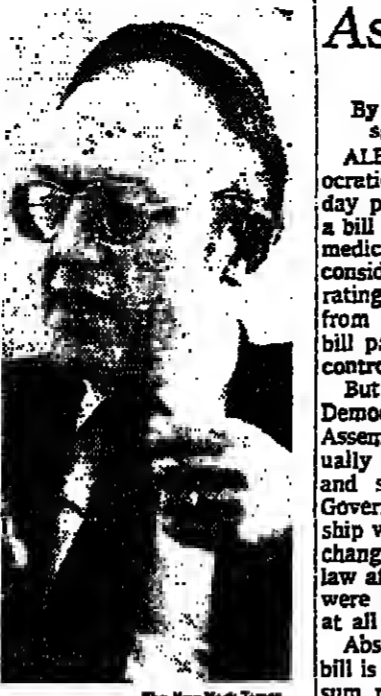

Comment on Economist Panel And a council of economists be set up to advise the city, ceased to meet because, according to one member, "he never could make up his mind what he wanted us to do."

New efforts by City Hall to put some vigor into the municipal economy have become almost a perennial feature of mayoral administrations. Last year, Mr. Eisenpreis and Mr. Zuccotti jointly announced a new agency for economic development that was to make rebuilding the economy a prime priority for city government.

The year before, soon after Mr. Beame took office as Mayor, he announced the creation of a Council of Business and Economic Advisers that was to help the city retain companies and jobs. It now is defunct.

Similar efforts were begun during the Lindsay administration, which created the E.D.A. with the hope that coordinating many economic activities under one head would make a difference.

All these initiatives proved unavailing, however, if they are measured against the record of job losses the city has sustained over the last seven years. In an interview on Wednesday, in which he refused to affirm or deny published reports that he was about to resign, Mr. Eisenpreis said his own high hopes that he could stem the city's job losses faltered because he did not have "the right tools."

"We were trying to sell the same old merchandise and no one was buying," he said. "We had narrow label suits when everybody wanted wide lapels."

The tools of tax abatements and cheap financing now are in place, he said, and with these the city can move ahead to make New York a better place in which to do business.

Assembly Passes Bill to Alter Handling of Medical Malpractice

By RONALD SMOTHERS Special to The New York Times ALBANY, June 11—The Democratic-controlled Assembly passed its own version of a bill altering the way in which medical malpractice cases are considered by courts.

But both Republicans and Democrats speculated that the Assembly version would eventually be passed by the Senate.

Absent from the Assembly bill is a limitation on the lump-sum payments that juries can award plaintiffs in the subjective category of "loss due to pain and suffering."

The Senate subsequently softened its stand and passed a bill requiring that the first $100,000 of a "pain and suffering" award be granted in the form of a lump sum.

Under the Assembly bill, the amount of the award is determined by the jury, but the amount must be paid in the form of a lump sum.

Officials of the New York State Medical Society, which favors the Senate version and vigorously lobbied for its adoption, were less comfortable with the prospect of the Assembly version's becoming law.

"This will not control the sharply rising malpractice insurance premiums which physicians have no choice but to pass along to patients in the form of higher medical bills," said Dr. John E. Finkbeiner, president of the Manhattan branch of the state society.

Assemblyman Leonard Silverman, Democrat of Brooklyn and sponsor of the malpractice insurance legislation passed today, has been vocal in his limitations on awards for pain and suffering, calling it a "drastic" and possibly "unconstitutional" step.

BUCKLEY SCORES RACIAL SURVEYS

Study of Six School Districts in New York City Called a 'Harassing' Maneuver

By FRANK LYNN
Raising what could become a Senate campaign issue, Senator James L. Buckley declared yesterday that a Federal ethnic and racial survey of six city school districts represented "bureaucratic arrogance" and "a distortion" of the civil rights law.

Speaking to a receptive audience of school administrators, school board members and parent-teacher association officials, all of whom are protesting the survey, Mr. Buckley compared the "harassing" tactics of the Office for Civil Rights of the United States Department of Health, Education and Welfare to the actions of King George III before the American Revolution.

Referring to the grievances listed in the Declaration of Independence, the Conservative-Republican Senator said: "He, meaning George III, has created a host of offices and sent hither multitudes of officers to harass our people."

School Officials Resist
Officials in five of the six districts — the 10th in the Bronx, the 18th and the 21st in Brooklyn and the 28th and the 28th in Queens — have been resisting the survey. They argue that the two-inch thick questionnaire would be costly and time consuming and would duplicate other surveys. They also say that its purpose has not been properly explained. The sixth district is the heavily Puerto Rican and Black Ninth District in the Bronx. Most of the other districts are predominantly white.

Officials in the districts were ordered in Federal District Court earlier this week to cooperate with the survey, which is part of a larger citywide study to determine whether schoolchildren are victims of discrimination.

Some 65 representatives of the five districts were clearly angry and puzzled over what steps they could take to resist the survey. They met with the Senator in a meeting room at Public School 179 in Fresh Meadows, Queens, and complained with the noise of traffic on the Long Island Expressway nearby.

Repeatedly, they angrily declared that the survey was the prelude to the imposition of a racial "quota system" for students and faculty members.

"They will demonstrate that there is no question that we are discriminating," said a school official.

Carter View Shared
Mr. Buckley has already signaled that, like Jimmy Carter, the Democratic Presidential hopeful, he will campaign against the Washington bureaucracy. The Senator said he hoped to make the survey an issue in his campaign for re-election. Reminded of the similarity to Mr. Carter, the Senator said in an interview: "I was there first."

Mr. Buckley contended that even a fellow Republican, President Ford, had difficulty restraining the Federal bureaucracy.

"We have developed a bureaucracy that even a President can't control unless he makes it his sole preoccupation," the Senator said.

He told the school officials that the Civil Rights Act of 1964 was being distorted by Federal officials who "equated civil rights with a computer printout of the mathematical mix of every subdivision in a community."

He said that he had introduced "the antidiscrimination act" of 1976 which would ban quota systems and ethnic or racial surveys.

The likelihood that the survey would become an issue in the Senate campaign was also pointed up at yesterday's meeting by criticism of Dr. Bernard Gifford, the deputy chancellor of the city's board of Education, who was not present.

Dr. Gifford implied that District 18 in the East Flatbush-Camarsie section of Brooklyn and District 26 in the Bayside-Little Neck area of Queens were guilty of racism because their faculties were overwhelmingly white. The districts have denied the charges. Dr. Gifford is a close associate of Daniel P. Moynihan, who announced on Thursday his candidacy for the Democratic Senate nomination to oppose Mr. Buckley.

Humphrey Backs Mondale
PHILADELPHIA, June 11 (UPI) — Senator Hubert H. Humphrey wants Senator Walter F. Mondale to be the Democrats' Vice-Presidential candidate. Mr. Humphrey, speaking to a group of black publishers last night and cooing that former Georgia Gov. Jimmy Carter would win the Democratic nomination, said "I hope my friend, Senator Mondale, will be the Vice President." Both Senator Humphrey and Senator Mondale are Minnesota Democrats.

ONE HUNDRED SUMMERS THE FRESH AIR FUND

Who's with Jane?

During the past few weeks Jane Powell has appeared — in newspapers and on television — in various fascinating parts of Dry Dock Country.

Since you were invited to guess her whereabouts, perhaps you would be interested to know just where she was.

First Jane bicycled through 64th Street between Park and Lexington. Then she visited the Martha Graham School of Contemporary Dance. Next came the 2nd Avenue station of the new Roosevelt Island Tramway and then the Children's Zoo in Central Park.

This time Jane is at the Metropolitan Museum of Art. We're telling you, because this time our contest is a little different. And this time there is absolutely no clue in our newspaper ad.

The right answer can be found in our current TV commercial.* During the course of that commercial a Mystery

Celebrity makes a cameo appearance with Jane.

If you spot and identify this very important person — a very big name in this town — you could be in for quite an unusual treat.

Come to any office of the Dry Dock Savings Bank before Friday, June 18, and drop the Mystery Celebrity's name — along with your own and your address — into the official contest bowl.

On the morning of the 18th, bonded messengers will transfer all entries to our main office at 59th and Lexington. There at 12:30 pm the first 15 correct answers drawn from the master bowl will win an evening for two in Dry Dock Country — limousine, dinner, nightclub, the works.

We hope you win.
